said after the evidence was in that his mind was made up, where he did not state how he would vote,[94] or that he could not be influenced by the argument of counsel.[95] If the verdict was contrary to an opinion expressed by a juror, no cause for a new trial exists.[96]

(II) To Other Jurors. That a juror talked about the case to other jurors before submission thereof is not generally ground for a new trial,[97] except where his remarks indicated bias or prejudgment.[98] A casual remark derogatory to a party, made by a juror during the deliberations of the jury, does not require a new trial, in the absence of a showing that any one gave heed to or was influenced by it.[99]

b. After Verdict. The discussion of a case by a juror or the expression of an opinion thereon, founded on the evidence and proceedings, after the verdict, is not ground for a new trial.[1]

c. Disclosure of Verdict. The disclosure by jurors of a verdict agreed upon but not yet returned into court is not of itself ground for vacating the verdict.[2]

3. View or Investigation by Jurors — a. In General. A new trial should ordinarily be granted when jurors, without the authority of the court or consent of the parties, have examined or inspected a place or thing which is the subject of conflicting evidence,[3] and especially when the examination or inspection was made

If a juror was under the influence of liquor during any part of the time he was sitting in the case, the verdict should be set aside.[11] That a juror was intoxicated during a recess of the court is not ground for a new trial, unless he continued under the influence of liquor during some part of the actual hearing of the case.[12] The drinking of intoxicating liquor as a beverage by jurors while deliberating on their verdict is cause for setting it aside in some jurisdictions,[13] without regard to the quantity used or its effect.[14] In some states such drinking during the hearing or in the jury room is not ground for a new trial unless it unfitted a juror for the proper discharge of his duty.[15] That a juror, during the deliberations of the jury, took a small quantity of liquor as a medicine is not cause for vacating the verdict.[16]

Overcoming presumption of improper influence.— In Pittsburg, etc., R. Co. v. Porter, 32 Ohio St. 328, it was held that the presumption of improper influence arising from the furnishing of intoxicating liquors to a juror might be overcome by clear proof that there was no intention to influence the juror's action, and that his action was not influenced. Compare Sacramento, etc., Min. successful party or his attorney or agent drank intoxicating liquor with jurors at a chance meeting in a drinking place, the party, attorney, or agent not paying for the jurors' drinks, is not of itself ground for a new trial.[24] But if there be evidence of intimacy with jurors or of unusual attentions paid to them, coupled with such drinking, a new trial should be allowed.[25] A verdict will not be set aside because intoxicating liquor was furnished jurors during a recess by the unsuccessful party,[26] or with his consent,[27] or was furnished by both parties,[28] if there was no intoxication. It is not ordinarily ground for a new trial that a party treated jurors after the rendition of the verdict,[29] but is a matter for consideration in connection with any other suspicious circumstances.[30]

b. Favoring and Bribing. Ordinary acts of courtesy to jurors by a party or his counsel are not of themselves ground for a new trial,[31] but unusual attention or favors may be.[32] It is ground for a new trial that a juror was bribed by the

6. Separation of Jury — a. Before Verdict. The separation of the jury by permission of the court, after proper admonition, is not ground for a new trial.[36] Separation of the jury before the submission of the case without the consent of the parties or permission of the court is seldom of itself ground for a new trial.[37] Such separation after the submission of the case is sufficient cause for setting aside the verdict in some jurisdictions,[38] but not in others.[39] The separation of one or more jurors from the remainder of the jury during the trial,[40] or after the submission of the case,[41] is not of itself ground for new trial, especially where the separation was due to a misapprehension.[42] Where there is reason to believe that jurors may have been tampered with during a separation, a new trial should be granted.[43] Where the jury secured its liberty by force,[44] or by falsely representing that a verdict had been agreed upon,[45] a verdict arrived at on the reassembling of the jury should be set aside.

b. After Agreeing on Verdict. The unauthorized separation of the jury,[46] or of one or more jurors from the remainder of the jury,[47] after they had agreed upon a verdict, is not ground for a new trial,[48] in the absence of evidence of an improper motive for the separation. 7. Deliberations and Manner of Arriving at Verdict — a. General Conduct of Jury During Deliberations. The disorderly conduct of a jury after retiring for deliberation may be considered with other evidence of misconduct,[50] but generally is not of itself sufficient cause for setting aside the verdict.[51] At the present time, it is not of itself ground for a new trial that the jury partook of refreshments in the jury room provided by the officer having them in charge,[52] or by themselves.[53]

b. Presence and Remarks of Officers and Other Persons in Jury Room. It is improper for the officer in charge of the jury to remain in the jury room while they are deliberating on their verdict.[54] But the mere temporary presence of the officer in the jury room, not engaging in the discussion of the case or observing the voting, is not ground for a new trial.[55] If the officer has taken part in the deliberations of the jury, or has made remarks of a prejudicial nature on the case, the verdict should be set aside.[56] That the remarks actually influenced the jury need not be shown.[57] Remarks by the officer on matters foreign to the case do not require the allowance of a new trial.[58] The mere presence of an intruder in the jury room has been held insufficient ground for granting a new trial.[59] But if such a person has participated in the deliberations of the jury, the verdict should be set aside.[60]

c. Taking or Sending Papers to Jury Room — (i) Papers Not in Evidence. It is ground for a new trial that the jury, in arriving at their verdict, considered depositions not in evidence,[61] or documents or papers not in evidence of a character that might have influenced the verdict.[62] This is especially true where the only in being rendered more favorable to the losing party, there is no cause for a new trial.[70]

(II) Papers in Evidence. That the jury took to their room and considered papers regularly admitted in evidence is generally no ground for a new trial.[71] But the reading of depositions in the jury room, although received in evidence, is ground for a new trial in some states.[72]

d. Taking Additional Testimony and Rehearing Testimony. It is not ground for a new trial that a case was reopened after submission to the jury and additional witnesses examined in open court.[73] But it is ground for a new trial that the jury examined witnesses in the jury room in the absence of counsel.[74] That a shorthand reporter was permitted to enter the jury room and read parts of the testimony from his notes, at the request of the jury and in the absence of counsel for the losing party, is ground for a new trial.[75]

e. Personal Knowledge of Jurors. It is ground for a new trial that, after the jury retired for deliberation, a juror stated to other jurors, as of his own knowledge, facts material to the case,[76] or tending to discredit the losing party or a witness for him.[77] Where the juror's statements were not calculated to influence other jurors, or evidently did not influence them, a new trial may be denied.[78]

f. Instructions and Communications With Judge After Submission of Cause. The court may properly give a jury further instructions on their request for the same in open court and in the presence of counsel.[79] For the giving of written instructions out of court and in the absence of counsel a new trial must be granted in some states,[80] but in one state at least such practice is considered proper where the instructions and written request therefor are filed with the verdict.[81] Where the judge has gone to the jury room and instructed the jury orally or answered questions, although upon their request, a new trial must ordinarily be granted.[82] Where the judge entered the jury room, without the knowledge of the parties, and communicated with the jury about ordering supper if they were not likely to agree before meal time, a new trial was granted.[83]

g. Urging or Coercing Agreement. Where after the jury had been out a considerable length of time, a verdict was quickly agreed upon, under the evident influence of a threat by the judge or officer in charge, of a long confinement,[84] or other hardship,[85] or the jury was told that it must agree,[86] or jurors were urged to make a compromise,[87] a new trial should be granted. McCutchen v. Loggins, 109 Ala. 457, 19 So. 810. Bailiff urging jury to agree.— That the bailiff in charge of the jury entered the jury room several times at his own instance and urged the jury to hurry, as the court could do no business until they came out, was held insufficient ground for a new trial, where no prejudice appeared to have resulted from his action. be granted because the court told the jury that they should find a verdict if possible,[88] or because the court or officer in charge did not promise an early release or name any time when they would be discharged.[89]

h. Manner of Arriving at Verdict. A verdict will not be set aside merely because the amount thereof was the result of a compromise between jurors,[90] nor because the amount was first found by adding together the amounts the several jurors thought should be given and dividing the sum by twelve, if there was no agreement in advance to return a verdict for the quotient so found.[91] Where the Presumptions.— There is no presumption that a quotient verdict had been previously agreed to. McMurdock v. Kimberlin, 23 Mo. App. 523. The finding of a piece of paper in the jury room containing twelve different amounts, the total being divided by twelve and the quotient agreeing with the verdict, is generally held not to raise a presumption of a prior agreement to so fix upon the jurors agree in advance to be bound by a quotient so determined,[92] or, where the consent of any juror to a verdict is determined by any resort to chance, a new trial must be granted.[93]

8. Necessity of Objection. The misconduct of jurors or of other persons affecting jurors is not ordinarily ground for a new trial if the unsuccessful party, having knowledge of the misconduct before the verdict, failed to call the attention of the court thereto and ask proper relief.[94] Thus it has been decided that improper communication by or with jurors,[95] an improper view or examination by action by the court.[4] Where an offending juror is retained upon the jury by the consent of the parties,[5] or is excused and the cause tried to the remainder of the jury by consent, the misconduct of the juror is waived.[6]

E. Irregularities and Defects in Verdicts and Findings — 1. In Rendition of Verdict or Decision. A slight irregularity in returning or receiving a verdict is not ground for a new trial,[7] especially where the irregularity was not objected to at the time.[8] The refusal to poll a jury on demand of the unsuccessful party is ground for a new trial in some states,[9] but not in others.[10] The amendment of a verdict after the discharge of the jury is cause for setting it aside.[11] That findings of a court or referee were filed out of time is not ground for a new trial.[12]

2. In Verdict or Findings — a. Verdict or Decision on Immaterial Matter or Not Responsive to Issues. New trials seem to have been awarded in some cases where verdicts were rendered on immaterial issues,[13] but the more appropriate remedy would seem to be a repleader.[14] Where a verdict or decision is not responsive to the issues under the pleadings a new trial may be granted.[15]

Absence of counsel at the rendition of a verdict, not due to any fault of the court, is not ordinarily ground for a new trial. Fitzgerald v. Clark, 17 Mont. 100, 42 Pac. 273, 52 Am. St. Rep. 665, 30 L. R. A. 803; Gale v. Hoysradt, 1 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 19. Issues not presented by pleadings.— The court is not bound to make findings on issues not presented by the pleadings. Patent Brick Co. v. Moore, 75 Cal. 205, 16 Pac. 890.

The failure to answer questions specifically which are substantially answered in findings on other questions is not ground for new trial. Booth v. Mohr, 122 Ga. 333, 50 S. E. 173.

Motion in arrest of judgment.— It seems that the appropriate common-law remedy was a motion in arrest of judgment. Bowen v. White, 26 R. I. 68, 58 Atl. 252.

An omission to find material facts within the issue as distinguished from a failure to find upon the issue has been held ground for new trial. Lafayette v. Allen, 81 Ind. 166. See also Schmitz v. Lauferty, 29 Ind. 400.

If a finding upon the particular issue in favor of the movant could not change the result, a new trial should be refused. Gates v. McLean, 70 Cal. 42, 11 Pac. 489; Finch v. Green, 16 Minn. 355.

In Indiana it was formerly held that the failure to find upon a material issue was ground for a venire de novo and not for a new trial. Locke v. Merchants' Nat. Bank, 66 Ind. 353; Anderson v. Donnell, 66 Ind. 150 [overruling Cruzan v. Smith, 41 Ind. 288; Schmitz v. Lauferty, 29 Ind. 400]; Dehority v. Nelson, 56 Ind. 414; Whitworth v. Ballard, 56 Ind. 279; Housworth v. Bloomhuff, 54 Ind. 487; Jenkins v. Parkhill, 25 Ind. 473. But in later cases the failure to find expressly upon an issue was held equivalent to a negative finding. Citizens' Bank v. Bolen, 121 Ind. 301, 23 N. If a special finding states only matter of evidence and not the facts proved, a motion for a venire de novo is proper. Parker v. Hubble, 75 Ind. 580.

In Kansas the failure of a trial court to make findings on material facts sufficiently proved is not ground for a new trial unless the court has been requested to make such findings and has refused to do so. Shuler v. Lashhorn, 67 Kan. 694, 74 Pac. 264.

In North Dakota the refusal or failure of a trial judge to find on all the issues in an action tried by him is not ground for a new trial, but the aggrieved party may have a trial de novo in the supreme court. Chaffee-Miller Land Co. v. Barber, 12 N. D. 478, 97 N. W. 850.

new trial is proper in some jurisdictions. A verdict or decision which does not cover a material point on which there was legal evidence is "contrary to law," within a statute allowing a new trial on that ground,[19] and contrary to evidence.[20] That a jury has refused or failed to answer any special question on a material matter, which they were required to answer,[21] or that the court has refused improperly to require the jury to answer any such question,[22] when properly presented,[23] is ground for new trial.

c. Uncertainty or Inconsistency in Verdict or Findings. In some states a new trial will be granted, on motion, where the verdict fails to assess definitely the amount of recovery,[24] or where it is otherwise so indefinite and uncertain that judgment cannot be entered thereon.[25] That special findings on material facts

Compare Smith v. Broughton, 1 Harr. & M. (Md.) 33, as to failure of jury to return special verdict as instructed.

Failure to make special findings.— The failure of the jury to make distinct findings is not ground for a new trial, where it is agreed that the jury is to find generally for one of the parties, and the court is to put the verdict into proper form. Collins v. Carr, 118 Ga. 205, 44 S. E. 1000; Fearon v. Murray, 10 N. Brunsw. 11. At common law a jury may refuse to make special findings, and such refusal is not ground for a new trial. Devizes v. Clark, 3 A. & E. 506, 30 E. C. L. 240. Where a verdict is taken subject to the opinion of the court on a question of law reserved, failure to state the facts on which the question may be determined is ground for a new trial. been arbitrary or capricious,[51] or the jury plainly disregarded the uncontradicted testimony of a witness who was not impeached or discredited,[52] even though he was a party to the action,[53] a new trial will be granted. A jury is not, however, required to accept the direct testimony of a single witness to a fact which is opposed by other facts and circumstances.[54]

d. Effect of View by Jury. It is not an insuperable obstacle to the allowance of a new trial that the jury viewed or examined a place or thing which was the subject of conflicting evidence.[55]

e. Where Court Would Not Have Been Justified in Directing Verdict. In most jurisdictions a verdict may be set aside as contrary to the evidence or weight of evidence, although the court would not have been justified in directing a verdict or compulsory nonsuit for insufficiency of evidence.[56] That the court refused to dismiss the action or direct a verdict or nonsuit is not therefore a bar to the allowance of a new trial, at least on the ground that the verdict is against the weight of evidence.[57] Nor generally will a new trial be refused because the movant failed to ask that the case be taken from the jury,[58] although a contrary rule has been announced frequently.[59]

2. Sufficiency of Evidence in General — a. Statement of General Principles. was legally insufficient to sustain the verdict upon the ground taken by the successful party, a new trial will be granted ordinarily, although the evidence might support the verdict upon some other ground.[64] A verdict against the party sustaining the burden of proof will not be set aside where the evidence was not legally sufficient to sustain a verdict in his favor.[65]

b. Facts Admitted. Where evidence of a fact capable of proof was not offered because the fact was tacitly conceded at the trial,[66] or was admitted of record,[67] a new trial should be denied.

3. Several Issues, Parties, or Actions. Where a verdict is general, it will not be set aside as contrary to evidence, if the evidence fairly sustained any sufficient count[68] or plea[69] of the prevailing party. If the evidence was insufficient to sustain a plea on which the verdict is specifically put, a new trial should be granted.[70] If the evidence was insufficient as against any one of defendants against whom a joint verdict was returned, there must be a new trial.[71] That contrary verdicts have been returned on substantially the same evidence in two actions would not seem to require the allowance of new trials in both actions.[72] The fact that a

Where there is no evidence of part of a claim allowed in full, it is proper to grant a new trial. Blaise v. Anderson, 35 Minn. 306, 28 N. W. 922; Fury v. Merriman, 45 Mo. 500; Hewitt v. Gzowski, 6 U. C. C. P. 89; Harper v. Davies, 45 U. C. Q. B. 442, where verdict must have included damages on counts not proved.

If a verdict for partial destruction of property or damage thereto equals the highest valuation placed on all the property, a new trial should be granted. Thompson v. Evans, 49 Ill. App. 289; Texas Cent. R. Co. v. Ascue, (Tex. 1887) 4 S. W. 13. See also Ingraham v. Russell, 4 Miss. 304, where verdict on warranty for two slaves nearly equaled valuation placed on three.

Verdict excessive as to one defendant.— Where each defendant is liable for the damages occasioned by joint trespasses, the court will not interfere with the verdict because it may seem excessive as to one defendant. Grantham v. Severs, 25 U. C. Q. B. 468.

Dismissal as to one defendant.— Where plaintiff has dismissed his action after verdict and before judgment as to that one of several defendants by whose conduct the damages were aggravated, a new trial may be allowed the other defendants. Thomas v. Hoffman, 22 Mich. 45. See also Chicago, etc., R. Co. v. Hardie, 85 Ill. App. 122, as to effect of prejudice against dismissed defendant.

Excessive valuation of property in detinue. — That the jury fixed an excessive valuation on property in detinue was held not ground for a new trial where it was not shown that defendant could not restore the property. Tarlton v. Briscoe, 1 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 67; Thompson v. Porter, 4 Bibb (Ky.) 70.

Deductions not claimed at trial.—A new trial will not be granted on the ground that the jury made no deductions for benefits to plaintiff of which no point was made on the trial. Broadnax v. United Engineering, etc., Co., 128 Fed. 649 [affirmed in 136 Fed. 351, 69 C. C. A. 177].

Amount fixed by court and not by verdict. — That the amount defendant in bastardy proceedings is required to pay is excessive, such amount being determined by the court and not by the verdict, is not ground for a new trial. McIlvain v. State, 80 Ind. 69.

Action for damages — Death of child after verdict and before judgment.— Where, in an action for the negligent injury of a child brought by his next friend, the child died after verdict and before judgment, a new trial was refused, although damages were presumably given on the supposition that the child would continue to live. Presumptions.— Where the verdict does not exceed that portion of personal property destroyed, there is no presumption that the jury gave damages as to other property as to which defendant's act was justified. St. Louis, etc., R. Co. v. Lindsay, 55 Ark. 281, 18 S. W. 59.

damages.[5] This rule seems to apply to verdicts giving punitive damages.[6] The rule announced by some courts is that the damages awarded must appear grossly excessive at first blush,[7] and by other courts that they must be so large as to shock the conscience or the court's sense of justice.[8] That the court deems a remittitur of part of the amount of recovery proper does not necessarily show that he found that the jury was influenced by prejudice or passion.[9]

Passion has been defined as "excited feeling" and prejudice as a "state of mind partial to the successful party, or unfair to the other." Pratt v. Pioneer Press Co., 32 Minn. 217, 18 N. W. 836, 20 N. W. 87.

Rule as stated by Judge Kent.— "The damages, therefore, must be so excessive as to strike mankind, at first blush, as being beyond all measure, unreasonable and outrageous, and such as manifestly show the jury to have been actuated by passion, partiality, prejudice, or corruption." Coleman v. Southwick, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 45, 52, 6 Am. Dec. 253, libel.

Rule as stated by Judge Shaw.— "Sometimes it has been said, that, although the court has full power to set aside the verdict in this class of cases, they will not do it, unless the damages are enormous, outrageous, or entirely disproportionate. But there intensive epithets afford very little aid in forming a standard, or arriving at any general and practical rule. For the question still recurs, on the facts in each case, what is 'enormous' or 'outrageous'; and this depends on the nature and aggravation of each case, to be determined by all the circumstances." Treanor v. Donahoe, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 228, 230.

That the jury awarded damages for less than half the uncontradicted value of the property sued for is a circumstance indicating that the jury were influenced by passion, prejudice, or partiality in awarding any damages to the successful party. Powell v. Missouri Pac. R. Co., 59 Mo. App. 335.

That the answers to special questions are clearly not supported by the evidence tends to show passion or prejudice on the part of the jury. Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Weaver, 16 Kan. 456.

(III) In Excess of Demand. It has been held that a verdict should be set aside where the amount of recovery exceeds the demand for damages in the declaration or plea of set-off,[10] but under the practice codes at least the pleadings may be amended and the verdict allowed to stand if not excessive under the evidence.[11] It seems that a recovery which exceeds that demanded in the writ is not for that reason cause for setting aside the verdict.[12]

c. Inadequate Damages — (I) In General. That the damages recovered are clearly inadequate compensation for the injury sustained is generally ground for a new trial.[13] Where the evidence shows that the prevailing party was entitled to substantial damages, if any, a verdict for nominal damages only, or for an amount clearly less than the damages proved, should be set aside, although the evidence as to liability was conflicting.[14] A new trial for inadequacy of damages will not allowed when, in the judgment of the court, the verdict should have been against the prevailing party,[15] or when a verdict appears to have been given for nominal damages only, because the jury concluded that there was no liability.[16] A new trial for inadequacy of damages will not be granted on the application of the party against whom they were awarded.[17]

(II) Nature of Action. A new trial will be more readily granted because of the smallness of the recovery in actions for breach of contract or for injury to or detention of property.[18] But a new trial may be granted in actions in which there is no certain rule for computing damages.[19] Independently of statutes, it has been held improper in some states to grant new trials in actions for injury to the person for inadequacy of damages that cannot be definitely ascertained.[20] In the absence of a contrary statute, a new trial will be granted in, presumably, any jurisdiction, where the damages awarded in an action for personal injury are less than the pecuniary loss definitely shown.[21] It has been held that inadequacy of damages is not ground for a new trial in actions for defamation of character;[22] but, independently of statute, the contrary doctrine is probably more generally entertained at the present time.[23] In actions in which there is no definite measure of damages, and especially in actions for injury to the person, the inadequacy of the recovery must be very apparent to justify the allowance of a new trial.[24] It is not sufficient that the judge favored a large verdict.[25] In some jurisdictions, especially under statutes, the inadequacy must be so great as to indicate passion, prejudice, or other improper motive on the part of the jury;[26] but where such improper influence is indicated, a new trial should be granted.[27]

(III) Under Statutes. Under statutes in some states a new trial cannot be granted on account of the smallness of damages given in an action for injury to the person or reputation,[28] and this has been held to be the case although such damages do not equal the actual pecuniary injury sustained by plaintiff.[29] The statutes have been held to apply to actions for death caused by the tortious act of defendant.[30]

(IV) Several Grounds of Claim. Where the verdict is general and the damages are not inadequate under the evidence as to any one of several grounds of claim which are not admitted, it will be presumed ordinarily that the jury found for the prevailing party on that ground only, and a new trial will be denied.[31] Where a defendant has pleaded a recoupment, counter-claim, or set-off, a verdict for plaintiff which does not find the amount of defendant's damages will be presumed to have been reduced in amount by defendant's claim and will not be set aside.[32]

H. Surprise, Accident, Mistake, and Inadvertence[33] — 1. Failure to Defend, and Mistake, Inadvertence, or Negligence in Presenting Case or Defense — a. Want of Actual Notice of Action. New trials have been granted in a few instances for want of actual notice of the action.[34] But ordinarily, where the service of process was regular and a defense to the action might have been made had the agent or representative of defendant exercised proper diligence to inform his principal of the action or to defend it, a new trial will be refused.[35]

b. Accident or Misfortune Preventing Defense. If the failure to offer a timely defense was due to unavoidable accident, and especially if further time was denied on proper application therefor, a new trial may be allowed.[36] Where the failure to file or report a pleading or defense properly tendered or made was due to the negligence or default of an officer of the court, a new trial should be granted.[37]

neglected to make a defense.[38] Nor is it a sufficient ground that he neglected to retain counsel,[39] or because a party neglected to inform his counsel of facts or evidence material to his case or defense.[40]

(II) Of Counsel. Nor as a rule is it sufficient cause for awarding a new trial that an attorney failed to file the necessary pleadings or otherwise defend the action,[41] or made mistakes in preparing the pleadings.[42] The failure of counsel, through mistake or inattention, to challenge a juror,[43] or to take note of matters occurring during the progress of the trial, is seldom ground for a new trial.[44]

family,[85] notice of which could not be given before the trial,[86] or for which a continuance was refused,[87] may be ground for a new trial. The speedy disposition of prior cases contrary to the assurances of attorneys engaged therein,[88] or the unexpected termination of a prior case by compromise,[89] is sometimes a sufficient excuse for a slight delay by a party in attending a trial.

c. Necessity For Presence of Party. The presence of the absent party must have been necessary, for the purpose of giving his testimony or of assisting in the preparation or presentation of his case, and ordinary prudence must have been exercised to prepare his case before the trial.[90] A new trial will not be granted for the absence of a party where there was no defense to the action,[91] or no defense was offered,[92] or where the particular defense which it is claimed he would have established, if present, was not pleaded.[93]

the attorney had been misinformed as to the time of trial by his own agent is not usually a sufficient excuse.[95] The necessary or excusable absence from the trial of the sole or leading counsel of the unsuccessful party, resulting in prejudice which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against, is ground for a new trial.[96] That the attorney of the unsuccessful party was engaged in trying a case in another court at the time, and was therefore absent from the trial, has been held insufficient ground for a new trial, where no attempt was made to continue the other case or to secure other counsel, or other special circumstances did not exist.[97] But where a case has been tried under such circumstances in violation of a rule of court, a new trial may be allowed.[98] Absence under leave of court,[99] or occasioned by unavoidable delays in travel in reaching the place of trial, may be excusable.[1]

e. Withdrawal of Counsel.[2] The unexpected withdrawal from the case of movant's counsel during the trial,[3] or so shortly before the trial as to have rendered it impossible to obtain other counsel and acquaint him with the facts of the case,[4] may be ground for new trial. Where the withdrawal of his attorney just before the trial was due to movant's failure, after timely notice, to provide for the payment of necessary fees and expenses, a new trial was refused.[5] The absence or withdrawal of counsel must have resulted in injury to the unsuccessful party.[6] Where the trial proceeded without objection and the movant was represented by other counsel, a new trial will not be allowed even though absent counsel might have tried the case better.[7]

f. Necessity For Diligence in Attempting to Procure Other Counsel. It is ordinarily held that the necessary absence from the trial of counsel because of sickness[8] or other cause,[9] or the death of counsel shortly before the trial,[10] or the withdrawal of counsel from the case,[11] is not ground for a new trial unless the

3. Witnesses and Evidence — a. Absence of Witnesses or Evidence[12] — (I) Absence or Death of Witness. The unexpected absence from the county at the time of the trial of a witness who resided therein,[13] or his absence from the trial where delay to secure his attendance was refused,[14] may be ground for a new trial, if the movant was not guilty of negligence in failing to secure his attendance. So also the absence from the trial of a non-resident witness, who had been expected, on reasonable grounds, to attend, has been held sufficient cause for allowing a new trial.[15] The unexpected absence of a witness who had been subpœnaed,[16] especially where he had been present in the court-room shortly before the trial,[17] or during the trial,[18] may be ground for a new trial. The death of an important witness a short time before the trial, his death being then unknown to the movant and there being no other witness to the same fact then known to him, has been held to authorize the allowance of a new trial.[19]

(II) Absence of Written Evidence. A new trial may be allowed for the absence of material written evidence at the trial without fault or negligence on the part of the movant.[20]

(III) Character of Absent Evidence. The testimony of the absent witness must have been material to the movant,[21] and of sufficient importance to have justified a different verdict had it been presented to the jury.[22] Where it would have been merely cumulative of other evidence that was introduced, a new trial will generally be denied.[23] Where a new trial is asked for because of the absence or exclusion of written evidence, it must appear that the evidence was sufficiently material to have probably changed the verdict.[24]

b. Admission or Exclusion of Evidence — (I) Admission. Surprise at the admission of proper evidence is generally not ground for a new trial.[25] But the admission of depositions previously held inadmissible,[26] or the admission of evidence where a stipulation of facts appeared to be exclusive of other evidence,[27] may be ground for new trial if the movant was unprepared to meet such evidence.

(II) Exclusion. Surprise at the exclusion of inadmissible evidence is seldom ground for a new trial.[28] The rule applies to the exclusion of the testimony of an incompetent witness,[29] to the rejection of documentary evidence or secondary

The rejection of a witness as incompetent for having indorsed the writ and the refusal of the court to cancel the indorsement and evidence for the introduction of which no proper foundation had been laid,[30] and to the rejection of depositions for irregularities apparent on the face thereof or known to the moving party,[31] or because the deponent was within reach of the process of the court and might have been called as a witness.[32] Surprise at the exclusion of evidence which the party offering it had the right to believe admissible may be ground for a new trial.[33] The rejection of a deposition for an irregularity in taking it,[34] or the rejection of a certified copy of a record because the signature to the certificate was not in the handwriting of the officer purporting to have made it,[35] has been held ground for a new trial, where the party offering the deposition or copy, without negligence on his part, had no prior knowledge of the irregularity or defect. The exclusion of evidence admitted under a previous ruling of the court,[36] or admitted without objection on a former trial of the case,[37] may be cause for new trial.

(III) Evidence Offered Out of Regular Order. The admission of evidence in rebuttal, which should have been offered in chief, and which the movant was unable to meet because it was not offered at the proper time,[38] or the admission of evidence after the party offering it had rested, and the refusal to admit other evidence to rebut it,[39] may require the allowance of a new trial on the ground of surprise. Mistake or inadvertence of counsel in failing to make a formal offer in evidence of a document properly proved, and the rejection of the document when offered during argument of the case, may be ground for a new trial.[40]

c. Character of Evidence — (I) In General. That the unsuccessful party, who had exercised proper diligence to discover the facts material to the case, was surprised by evidence which he had no reason to believe existed may be ground for a new trial.[41] This is especially true where false testimony has been introduced in the absence of the unsuccessful party.[42] A party cannot claim surprise which will entitle him to a new trial by evidence contained in depositions which were on file in the action before the trial,[43] nor by evidence which had been introduced on a former trial,[44] nor by evidence contained in letters written by him,[45] nor, generally, by matters contained in his own documentary evidence which he had not examined properly.[46] Where a wrong document was offered through the mistake of a third person a new trial was ordered.[47]

(II) Relevancy to Issues—(A) In General. Ordinarily it is not ground for a new trial that the movant was surprised by the introduction of evidence which was clearly within the issues, and therefore should have been anticipated and met.[48] The rule is usually the same, although the allegations of the pleadings impeach a witness is not usually sufficient cause for granting a new trial;[53] but, where the character of an important witness residing at a considerable distance from the place of trial had been attacked unexpectedly, a new trial was allowed.[54]

(III) Evidence Not Offered on Former Trial. That evidence pertinent to the issues had not been offered on a former trial was not sufficient cause for surprise to entitle the losing party to a new trial,[55] nor was the mere unexplained fact that a witness testified to facts not testified to by him on a former trial.[56] That evidence offered on a second trial was inconsistent with that adduced on the first trial,[57] or tended to prove a different point, although sustaining the same general defense,[58] or that the testimony of the adversary party or a witness on the second trial was inconsistent with his testimony on the first trial,[59] may be ground for a new trial because of surprise.

(IV) Testimony Contrary to Expectations of Movant — (A) In General. Usually it is not ground for a new trial that the movant was surprised at the testimony of his adversary or of other witnesses, who had not misled him by previous statements inconsistent therewith,[60] or at the testimony of an adversary witness called by him,[61] or at the testimony of his own witness, where there is no evidence of trickery or of tampering with the witness.[62] This is especially true where such witnesses called by him,[63] or by his adversary,[64] had not been questioned previously by the movant. Surprise at the false testimony of the successful party may be ground for a new trial where his adversary was compelled to call him to prove a deed or act of which there was no other available evidence at the time.[65]

(B) Testimony Contrary to Previous Statements—(1) ADVERSARY PARTY. A new trial may be granted for surprise at the testimony of the successful party contrary to his sworn pleading or admission of record,[66] or contrary to a written statement made by his attorney,[67] or contrary to prior statements made by him to the movant, which misled the latter in the preparation of his case.[68]

(2) OTHER WITNESSES. It may be sufficient cause for surprise and a new trial that a witness for the movant gave testimony inconsistent with his previous statements, where there is evidence of his having been tampered with,[69] or that his mind was affected at the time of the trial,[70] or that his testimony was contrary to his previous sworn statement given to the movant,[71] or that the movant was misled by his previous statements and did not call other witnesses,[72] or that the movant, relying on the statement of a witness that he would testify to a material fact which he was unable to testify to when called, was unprepared to call other witnesses to prove it.[73] Where the differences between the testimony of a witness and his previous statements to the movant were immaterial, or the legal effect of his testimony and statements were the same, a new trial should be denied.[74] It has been held insufficient excuse for not having been prepared to call other witnesses that the movant had been misled by previous statements of an adversary witness inconsistent with his testimony.[75] In the absence of deceit on the part of Evidence shown to be anticipated.—Where, in a personal injury action, plaintiff, while testifying in his own behalf on redirect examination, denied making any admissions to an officer of defendant that he contributed to the injury, plaintiff could not claim surprise as a ground for a new trial, based on the testimony of the officer that such admission was made. a witness, it is not ground for a new trial that counsel had misunderstood what he would testify to.[76]

(v) Mistake of Witness. That a witness claims to have made a mistake in his testimony is not ordinarily ground for a new trial,[77] especially where the verdict is sustained by other evidence.[78] But where it is clear that a witness was mistaken in giving the only or controlling testimony to a material fact,[79] or that the testimony of witnesses on which the verdict proceeded was founded on particular circumstances which have been clearly falsified,[80] a new trial should be granted. It must appear, however, that the mistake was of so important or controlling a character as probably to have affected the verdict.[81]

(vi) False Swearing.[82] That an important witness wilfully testified falsely to a material fact has been held ground for a new trial,[83] especially where the witness has been convicted of perjury in so testifying.[84] The fact testified to must have been material and important.[85] In original proceedings to set aside a verdict and judgment for false swearing, the conviction of the witness of perjury, or his death rendering conviction impossible, is generally held necessary.[86] Where perjury by a witness is a distinct ground for a new trial, it is generally held that he must have been convicted of the crime.[87] It is not enough that he has been indicted for it.[88]

d. Sufficiency of Evidence — (I) Failure of Proof — (A) In General. It is seldom ground for a new trial that the unsuccessful party was surprised by the action of the court in holding the evidence insufficient to support his action or defense.[89] A mistake of counsel as to the necessity of proving or disproving a fact is not ordinarily ground for a new trial.[90] An unexpected failure of evidence to establish some subordinate fact of the existence of which there is no doubt may be ground for a new trial.[91]

(B) Reliance on Prior Ruling. Where the failure to offer evidence upon some point was caused by the movant's reliance upon some ruling of the court in the action,[92] or upon some prior decision of the supreme court,[93] under which such evidence was unnecessary, a new trial may be allowed. It seems that a failure to offer evidence is not excused by a mere suggestion of the court, not amounting to a ruling, that such evidence was unnecessary.[94]

(C) Facts Apparently Admitted. Where no evidence was offered of a material fact because the fact seemed to be admitted by the pleadings, but the court held such evidence necessary, a new trial was allowed.[95] A new trial may be granted if the unsuccessful party failed for want of evidence of some fact in issue which his adversary had actually led him to believe would not be contested on the trial.[96] But it seems that there must have been a positive promise not to require proof of the fact or conduct amounting to fraud.[97]

(II) Surprise at Verdict—(A) In General. Surprise at a verdict which was justified by the evidence is not ground for a new trial.[98] Nor will a new trial be granted ordinarily to enable the movant to obtain additional evidence,[99] where his application does not meet the requirements as to newly discovered evidence.[1]

(B) Mistake of Judgment or Inadvertence as to Producing or Offering Evidence. It is not ground for a new trial that evidence was not offered because it was overlooked or forgotten or was not thought to be material or necessary,[2] and this is especially true if such evidence was not of a decisive or controlling character.[3]

e. Failure or Inability of Witness to Testify — (i) Forgetfulness or Withholding of Facts. The failure of a witness to testify to facts which might have been remembered by him by due attention is seldom ground for a new trial,[4] especially where the witness was not properly or fully examined or cross-examined by the movant.[5] But where the witness, on being previously questioned, had concealed his knowledge of such facts, a new trial may be allowed.[6]

(ii) Conduct of Witness. That the unsuccessful party was so nervous, excited, or embarrassed while testifying as to forget material facts or prejudice his case is not ground for a new trial.[7] The intoxication of a witness, which deprived the defeated party of his testimony, may be sufficient cause for allowing a new trial.

f. Prudence and Diligence in Avoiding Surprise or Accident and Injury Therefrom — (i) Evidence in General. A party moving for a new trial on the ground of surprise at evidence must have exercised ordinary prudence before the trial to discover what the evidence would be and ordinary diligence before and at the trial to overcome by other evidence the evidence by which he was surprised.[9]

A party surprised at the testimony of his own witness should have corrected any mistake made by him at the time,[10] or should have overcome his testimony, if possible, by any other evidence then obtainable.[11] Where it is claimed that a witness testified differently on successive trials and thereby surprised the movant, the effect of his later testimony should have been weakened by cross-examination or by showing his contradictory statements, or overcome, if possible, by other evidence.[12]

presence of evidence,[14] at the trial, a new trial for absence of witnesses or evidence will be refused. Ordinarily it is not enough that the movant had expected an absent witness to attend,[15] but he must have taken the proper steps for the timely issuance and service of a subpœna.[16] Where a witness refused to obey a subpœna or absented himself during the trial, compulsory process to compel his attendance must have been requested.[17] So also the proper steps must generally have been taken to compel the production of necessary written evidence.[18] Generally the movant must have used reasonable diligence to obtain the depositions of absent,[19] or non-resident witnesses.[20]

attendance of witnesses,[21] or the presence of written evidence at the trial,[22] that the movant expected his adversary to produce such witnesses or evidence. It has even been held that the promise of the adversary party to produce written evidence is not sufficient excuse for not having taken the proper steps to compel its production.[23] Nor is it ground for a new trial that the successful party did not use other witnesses who had been called or subpœnaed.[24]

(c) Failure of Movant to Offer Other Evidence. It must appear that the facts expected to be proved by the testimony of an absent witness or other absent evidence could not have been proved by the testimony of other witnesses who might have been called,[25] or by secondary or other original evidence.[26]

4. Accident or Misfortune Preventing Review of Case — a. In General. Accident which ordinary prudence could not have guarded against and which has prevented the review of a case is sometimes ground for a new trial.[27]

b. Loss of Court Files or Stenographer's Notes. New trials have been granted where a review of the case has been prevented by the loss of the files,[28] or of instructions,[29] or of the official stenographic notes of the proceedings.[30] Where it is possible to substitute the lost files or instructions,[31] or to make a proper case or bill of exceptions without the stenographic notes,[32] a new trial will be refused.

c. Failure to Obtain Transcript of Evidence or Record. Where the unsuccessful party has been deprived, without his fault or negligence, of the official stenographer's transcript of the evidence,[33] or of an official transcript of the record,[34] in time to obtain a review of the case, a new trial may be granted in some jurisdictions. If a proper case or bill of exceptions may be made without the notes of the stenographer, his death is not cause for a new trial.[35]

d. Failure to Rule on Motion For New Trial. The failure of the trial judge to pass on an application for a new trial during his term of office has been held ground for setting aside the verdict where his successor in office was not authorized to pass on the application.[36]

e. Failure to Settle Exceptions or Case. That the trial judge is unable to settle a bill of exceptions,[37] or that a case or bill of exceptions has been retained by him and not settled by him during his term of office,[38] or before his death occurring during his term of office,[39] is ground for new trial in some jurisdictions. The death of the judge before the expiration of the time during which a bill of exceptions might be presented is cause for a new trial in some states,[40] but not in others, at least where the bill might have been presented before his death.[41] Where no exceptions had been preserved for the judge to consider, his death was not ground for a new trial.[42]

5. Necessity of Objection or Application For Relief — a. Objections. Usually an irregularity or error in the proceedings by which the movant was surprised must have been objected to.[43] The rule applies to the admission of evidence not relevant to the issues.[44] Where the testimony of an incompetent witness upon a doubtful matter was admitted without objection because such incompetency was not then known to the unsuccessful party, a new trial may be allowed,[45] but not if the failure to discover the incompetency or make the objection was due to a want of ordinary diligence.[46] Where a witness refused to testify, the court should have been requested to require him to do so.[47]

b. Application For Delay or Continuance — (I) In General. When a new trial is asked for because of surprise or accident by reason of which a party was not prepared to proceed to trial, or to proceed further with the trial, at that time, a delay or continuance must have been requested,[48] unless no grounds for a motion for a continuance existed.[49]

(II) Absence of Party. That the necessary absence of a party from the trial may be ground for a new trial, he must have sent notice to his counsel, or the court, if possible, of the necessity and cause for his absence,[50] and must have informed his counsel, at some time, of the facts making his attendance necessary,[51] and proper application for delay or a continuance for such cause must have been made.[52] Where it became necessary for a party to absent himself during the trial, a similar application must have been made.[53]

evidence admitted and the pleadings.[66] A new trial may be allowed for surprise at evidence, although no delay was asked for, if the movant, although ordinarily diligent in preparing his case, then knew of no other evidence to refute evidence by which he was surprised.[67] It seems too that where the evidence which occasioned the surprise was offered at the close of the trial, a new trial may be allowed, although a continuance was not asked for.[68]

c. Nonsuit or Dismissal Without Prejudice. Where a plaintiff was surprised at evidence, or dissatisfied with the case made by him, and a continuance was refused, he should ordinarily have taken a nonsuit or dismissed his case without prejudice.[69]

6. Probable Effect of Surprise or Accident and Result of New Trial — a. In General. Ordinarily a new trial will not be granted for surprise or accident unless it appears probable that except for the surprise or accident a different verdict

Sickness of witness.— Where the sickness of a witness for plaintiff prevented him from finishing the giving of his testimony, which was material to plaintiff's case, the latter should have taken a nonsuit. Depeyster v. Columbian Ins. Co., 2 Cai. (N. Y.) 85.

Limitations of rule.— The rule that plaintiff should submit to a nonsuit does not apply where the claim is barred by the statute of limitations or defendant is beyond the juris-

would have been rendered;[70] but, where a case has been tried without notice or out of regular order and in the absence of the unsuccessful party and his counsel, a new trial is sometimes allowed without such showing.[71] Nor will a new trial be granted ordinarily unless it will probably result in a changed verdict.[72] The smallness of the amount involved may influence the court in refusing a new trial.[73]

b. New Evidence. The absent evidence for which a new trial is asked,[74] or the evidence which it is proposed to offer on a new trial to overcome the effect of evidence by which the movant was surprised,[75] must be of such character and importance as will probably result in a different verdict. Ordinarily a new trial will be refused where the proposed new evidence is merely cumulative of evi-

know that the evidence or witness was competent,[90] does not authorize the allowance of a new trial.

b. Absence of Witness or Evidence or Incompetency of Witness — (I) In General. Facts known to the movant at the time of the trial are not newly discovered because he did not then know the whereabouts of a witness who can testify thereto,[91] or because of the removal since the trial of the incompetency of a witness to such facts whose incompetency might have been removed by the applicant in time to have permitted him to testify.[92]

(II) Necessity of Application For Relief at Trial. Where the movant was unable to procure the attendance at the trial of material witnesses whose testimony was then known to him,[93] where such witnesses absented themselves during the trial,[94] where written evidence was lost or missing at the time of the trial,[95] he must have asked for a continuance or delay to enable him to produce such witnesses or evidence. If the evidence which it is proposed to offer on a new trial to refute evidence by which the movant was surprised at the trial was then unknown to him, a request for a delay or continuance was unnecessary.[96]

c. Discovery During Trial. Evidence discovered during the progress of the trial must have been offered, if possible, although out of the regular order of proof,[97]

Negligence of counsel is negligence of the party. Yates v. Monroe, 13 Ill. 212. And the employment of another attorney to procure a new trial does not excuse lack of diligence on the part of the former attorney. McBride v. McClintock, 108 Iowa 326, 79 N. W. 83.

Where there are joint parties, each must have exercised reasonable diligence in order to obtain the necessary evidence. Bertram v. State, 32 Ind. App. 199, 69 N. E. 479.

Absence from state.— That the applicant was absent from the state is not of itself a sufficient excuse for want of diligence. Burnley v. Rice, 21 Tex. 171.

Existence of paper unknown to party.— It is not negligence not to have searched for a paper, the existence of which was unknown until after the trial. Conlon v. Mission of Immaculate Virgin, 87 N. Y. App. Div. 165, 84 N. Y. Suppl. 49.

Prima facie showing of diligence — What is.— That the newly discovered evidence consisted of an account-book which had been in the possession of the successful party, but the existence of which he had denied on being asked to produce it, was sufficient prima facie showing of diligence. Blackburn v. Crowder, 110 Ind. 127, 10 N. E. 933.

tion is made after the term at which the verdict was rendered,[7] or where there have been several trials,[8] or where the evidence is cumulative to evidence offered at the trial.[9]

b. Failure to Make Proper Inquiry. That evidence was discovered soon after the trial by systematic inquiry or search usually indicates that proper diligence was not exercised to discover the evidence before the trial.[10] Ordinarily a new trial will not be granted for newly discovered evidence which might have been discovered before the trial by inquiry of a co-party,[11] or of a member of the applicant's family,[12] or of an agent or servant[13] or copartner,[14] who represented him in the matter in controversy. As a rule the applicant for a new trial must have made reasonable inquiry, where necessary, before the trial to learn what persons were present at the time a matter in controversy occurred.[15] He must have been reasonably diligent to find and inquire of persons known or supposed to have participated in an act, transaction, or conversation in controversy, or to have had some connection therewith or knowledge thereof, or to have been present at the time and place of its occurrence, as to their knowledge thereof.[16] The failure of the

e. Admissions by Adversary.[24] That the movant did not discover before the trial evidence of admissions, not of the res gestæ, made by the successful party, does not ordinarily show a lack of reasonable diligence;[25] but where the movant knew that his adversary had conversed with another person regarding the matter in controversy his failure to make inquiry of such person as to what was said shows lack of diligence.[26]

f. Surprise or Mistake as an Excuse — (i) Surprise at Adversary's Evidence. Where the applicant for a new trial was surprised by evidence offered by his adversary, and then knew of no evidence to refute it, he cannot be charged with negligence in not having produced at the trial evidence of that character which he has since discovered.[27] Thus it is not usually negligence not to have discovered and produced evidence to refute evidence that was not pertinent to the issues or was contrary to his adversary's pleadings or of which he was not fairly put upon notice by such pleadings.[28] Nor was it negligence not to have been prepared to meet evidence which was contrary to the theory on which the case had been tried by his opponent in an inferior court.[29] Where the movant was surprised at the trial by evidence of an alleged act or admission, a new trial may sometimes be allowed to permit him to prove that he was not present at the time and place alleged.[30] Usually it is not negligence not to have anticipated and been prepared to meet evidence of alleged admissions by the unsuccessful party, not of the res gestæ, offered in his absence.[31]

(11) Mistake, Inadvertence, or Surprise in Presenting Case or Defense. It is not sufficient excuse for want of preparation to prove or disprove a matter in issue that the movant did not know that evidence on such matter would be required or offered,[32] unless he was actively misled by the successful party.[33] Nor can known evidence be considered as in any sense newly discovered, or the failure to have produced it be excused, because the unsuccessful party did not understand its materiality or importance in time to produce it.[34] That the movant was disappointed in the testimony of his witnesses is not ordinarily a sufficient excuse for his having failed to discover and produce at the trial the evidence alleged to be newly discovered.[35] In determining the question of reasonable diligence, the court may properly consider the apparent sufficiency of the evidence produced at the trial by the applicant.[36] It is not reasonable diligence to rely upon a mere expectation that witnesses or evidence necessary to the movant's case or defense will be produced by the adversary party.[37] Forgetfulness or oversight of evidence or witnesses by the applicant until after the trial is not ground for a new trial.[38]

If the evidence is material on that issue alone on which the verdict is based, a new trial may be granted. McMullen v. Winfield Bldg., etc., Assoc., 4 Kan. App. 459, 46 Pac. 410.

Decision of supreme court construing statute different from trial court.— A decision of the supreme court of another state construing a statute of such state read in evidence differently from the construction given it by the trial court may justify the allowance of a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence. Martin v. Clark, 111 Wis. 493, 87 N. W. 451.

Oral evidence.— Although written evidence may be more decisive and therefore furnish stronger cause for granting a new trial oral evidence is legally sufficient. (2) As to the Issue or Point Involved. Evidence to prove a distinct issue is of course not cumulative.[76] It has sometimes been said, especially in older cases, that evidence is cumulative which tends to prove a fact or issue upon which evidence was offered at the trial.[77] The generally recognized rule is that evidence of a distinct probative fact is not cumulative to evidence of another fact, although both facts support the same issue.[78] Although the distinction has not often been

Statement of rule.— "There are often various distinct and independent facts going to establish the same ground, on the same issue. Evidence is cumulative which merely multiplies witnesses to any one or more of these facts before investigated, or only adds other circumstances of the same general character. But that evidence which brings to light some new and independent truth of a different character, although it tend to prove the same proposition or ground of claim before insisted on, is not cumulative within the true meaning of the rule on this subject." Waller v. Graves, 20 Conn. 305, 310.

"If the new evidence be specifically distinct and bear upon the issue, though it may be intimately connected with some part of the testimony at the trial, it is not cumulative." Alger v. Merritt, 16 Iowa 121, 127.

made, evidence of an admission of one probative fact is not cumulative to evidence of an admission of a different probative fact.[79] Evidence of the same kind to prove the same probative fact is cumulative.[80] Evidence of a distinct probative fact is not cumulative because it may also tend to prove another fact as to which evidence of a similar character was offered.[81] Evidence to contradict evidence which was not contradicted at the trial is not cumulative.[82] The fact that newly discovered evidence is cumulative of evidence incidentally favorable to the unsuccessful party drawn out on cross-examination of an adversary witness is no reason for refusing a new trial.[83]

IV. PROCEEDINGS TO PROCURE NEW TRIAL.[10]

A. New Trial on Court's Own Motion. Where the common-law power of a court of general jurisdiction has not been restricted by statute, such court may grant a new trial of its own motion,[11] and this, although an application on other grounds is pending at the time.[12] This power has been taken away or limited by statutes in some states.[13]

B. Court or Judge to Which Application Made — 1. The Court — a. In General. Generally an application for a new trial must be made to the court in which the case was tried.[14] An application for the retrial of an issue directed by a chancery court should be made to that court.[15] Where a case has been tried before a judge of another court or district presiding temporarily in the trial court, the application should be made in that court.[16]

b. Appellate Courts and Courts In Banc. At common law it is not a matter of right to make an application for a new trial or reserve it for hearing before a full bench,[17] or before an appellate division or court.[18] Statutes sometimes provide for making such applications to courts in banc or to appellate divisions or courts.[19]

2. The Judge[20] — a. In General. Ordinarily the application should be heard and determined by the judge who presided at the trial;[21] nevertheless, unless applicants who are entitled to it upon the merits of the application.[39] A party improperly joined cannot be heard to complain that a new trial was allowed to other applicants only.[40] Where the liability or interest of a defeated party or parties is distinct from that of co-parties, he, or they, may move for a new trial as to such liability or interest without joining co-parties.[41] Defendants against whom a verdict has been found in a tort action may move for a new trial, without being joined in the motion by defendants who were acquitted.[42] In general one defendant cannot be deprived of the right to apply for a new trial by the refusal of co-defendants to join in the application.[43] Joint parties who refuse to join in the application and whose interests might be adversely affected by the allowance of a new trial must be given proper notice of the application.[44]

b. As to Adverse Parties. In some states, if plaintiff's motion cannot be sustained as to all defendants against whom a new trial is asked, it may be overruled as to all.[45] A plaintiff should not apply for a new trial as against such defendants only as had a verdict in their favor.[46] But he need not, or should not, ask a new trial as against a defendant who has successfully disclaimed any interest in the subject of litigation.[47] A motion by a defendant for a new trial generally may be denied, if the finding in favor of plaintiff is correct, although the evidence was not sufficient to support a finding in favor of other defendants on a counter-claim.[48]

4. Parties to Petition or Complaint. All the parties affected by the judgment in the original action should be made parties to a petition or complaint after the term for a new trial.[49]

D. Time For Application[50] — 1. In General. In some states an application for a new trial made before the findings of a referee[51] or court[52] are filed must be disregarded. And where special issues submitted to a jury form only a part of the matters in controversy, a notice of intention to move for a new trial filed before the decision of the court is premature.[53]

2. Limitation at Common Law — a. In General. Under the English common-law practice, a motion for a new trial must have been made as a rule within four days of the entry of a rule for judgment on the verdict.[54] But there seems to have been no absolute limit of time for making the application.[55] It might be made at any time during the term;[56] and even after the term, where the circumstances were unusual and the applicant had not been in laches.[57]

b. Effect of Laches. Independently of any strict limitation by statute or rule of court, an application for a new trial must be made within a reasonable time under the circumstances of the particular case.[58]

Exceptions lost.— The benefit of exceptions depending on the filing of a motion for a new trial will be lost, if the motion is overruled or stricken because not filed in proper time. State v. McGowan, 62 Mo. App. 625.

Motion prematurely made.— Neither can the court consider errors which are proper grounds for new trial when the motion was prematurely made. It is just as much a failure in statutory conformity to file a motion for new trial before the proper time as it is to file it after that time. St. Louis v. Boyce, 130 Mo. 572, 31 S. W. 594.

Ruling in anticipation of motion.—A court has no authority to rule on a motion for a new trial which has not been filed and is not before it in anticipation that it may be subsequently filed. Carmack v. Erdenberger, (Nebr. 1906) 110 N. W. 315.

Amendment of motion.—Assignments of error may be considered, although not embraced in the original motion for a new trial, but only in an amended motion filed more than two days after the judgment; the allowance of the amendment being in the discretion of the court. has been applied where a new trial was asked because of the insufficiency of the evidence to sustain a finding.[69]

c. Computation of Time — (i) From What Event. Generally the time for making application for a new trial begins to run from the rendition of the verdict or decision.[70] It runs from the rendition of a special verdict,[71] or the filing of findings of fact by the court,[72] rather than from the entry of judgment on such verdict or findings. But in the case of special findings of a jury in an equity case which are advisory only, the time begins to run from the adoption of such findings by the court.[73] Where an interlocutory judgment has been entered and the cause submitted to a referee for an accounting, the time limited to move for a new trial after the "decision of a court" begins to run from the approval of the referee's report.[74] Under some statutes the time runs from the entry of judgment.[75] Where time runs from the judgment the judgment must have been signed.[76] It runs from the judgment where a demurrer to evidence is sustained.[77] Where by statute the application for new trial may be made at any time "within one year after the former trial," the time so limited begins to run from the judgment and not from the verdict.[78]

(II) Days Counted. In some jurisdictions the days of a recess of the court after the trial and during the term are to be counted as days within which a motion for a new trial may, or must, be filed.[79] In other jurisdictions judicial days only are counted against the applicant.[80] In some states secular days only are counted,[81] while in other states Sunday is counted except it be the last day of the time limited.[82] Where the last day is a holiday for some purposes, but not as to the transaction of judicial business, it is to be included in the computation.[83] In some jurisdictions both the day on which the verdict was rendered and that on which the motion was made are counted,[84] but in others the former day is excluded.[85]

d. Presentation to Judge. In some states it is sufficient to file a motion in proper time with the clerk of the court without presenting it to the judge.[86] In other states the motion must be presented to the judge during the term,[87] or within a time limited, when made in vacation.[88]

4. Extension of Time — a. By Court. It is generally held that a time limited by rule of court for making application for a new trial may be extended by the court.[89] In a number of jurisdictions it is held that statutes limiting the time are mandatory, and that a court may neither extend the time in the first instance nor permit an application to be made after the usual time has expired, except as provided by statute.[90] In other jurisdictions it is held that an application made out of time may be considered and allowed where the circumstances are unusual and

Pendency of motion for judgment on special findings.— Where the movant was unavoidably prevented from filing the motion on the third day after the verdict, the pendency of a motion for judgment on special findings is a reasonable excuse for not having filed it on the first or second day. denied in others.[96] Where it is competent for the parties to make a binding agreement of such character, the application must be made within the stipulated time,[97] and default in this regard is not excused by the fact that associate counsel to whom it was forwarded for filing was absent at the time.[98]

(II) By Waiver.[99] The failure to file a motion for a new trial within the required time may be waived by contesting the motion on other grounds without objecting to such delay,[1] or by admitting "due and timely service of notice of the motion" for new trial.[2] So an irregularity in granting during the term an extension of time after the expiration of a first extension may be waived by a failure to move for a dismissal of the motion on the hearing.[3] But an agreement to a proposed case is not a waiver of the filing of a motion out of time.[4] And where a new trial was denied, the failure of the successful party to object that the motion was not filed in time raises no presumption that he consented to such filing.[5] Where the successful party was present when leave was granted to file a motion out of proper time, he must have objected to the order.[6]

c. Pendency of Other Proceedings. The pendency of a motion for judgment non obstante veredicto,[7] or for judgment on special findings,[8] or to modify findings of fact and conclusions of law,[9] or to set aside findings,[10] does not extend the time for making application for a new trial. and not from the affirmance of the judgment on appeal.[11] Where the time begins to run from the rendition of the judgment, and a judgment on special findings is reversed, the party aggrieved by the general verdict may move for a new trial within the time limited after the entry of judgment on the verdict.[12] And where a case was reversed on exceptions, but the judgment was subsequently affirmed because the case was not seasonably reëntered for trial, the time for making a motion for a new trial began to run from the affirmance.[13]

E. by the giving of bond.[23] A motion for a new trial after the term need not recite that a proper undertaking has been given where the fact appears in the record.[24] A bond given by plaintiff inures to the benefit of a substituted plaintiff.[25] A bond conditioned to pay the judgment on the denial of the motion is enforceable, by action, although an appeal is pending.[26]

E. 313, as to failure to serve rule nisi as required by order of court. A statute requiring notice of an application for a new trial was held not complaint for a new trial after the term based on unavoidable casualty preventing prosecution or defense,[32] is generally required.

b. To Whom Given.[33] Where a new trial as to a part only of the parties to the action is permissible, notice need not be given to those parties as to whom a new trial is not asked.[34] Where a co-party of the movant, who would be affected by the allowance of a new trial, does not join in the application, he must be given such notice as is required to be given to adversary parties.[35] If he could not be affected prejudicially by the order, notice need not be served upon him.[36]

2. Form and Contents — a. Requirement of Writing and Signing. Statutes and rules of court generally require that notice of the intention to move or of the application be in writing.[37] Where a statute or rule of court which provides for notice does not expressly require it to be in writing, it must nevertheless be in writing or be given orally in open court and entered on the minutes.[38] A written notice should be signed by the applicant or his attorney.[39]

b. Form in General. Merely technical defects or informalities in a written notice, not calculated to mislead the party notified, should be disregarded.[40] Service of the motion itself specifying the grounds relied on has been held sufficient.[41] And obtaining a stay to make a case and exceptions, making and serving such case and exceptions, and the preparation of amendments thereto by the adverse party, constitute notice of a motion for a new trial.[42] Notice of an intention to move to vacate the judgment is not an equivalent of notice of motion for a new trial.[43] It has been held unnecessary that the notice should state in terms that to apply to an application for a rule nisi in term. Gaulden v. Crawford, 30 Ga. 674; Powell v. Howell, 21 Ga. 214.

c. Statement of Grounds of Motion. Under some codes a notice is fatally defective which does not designate the grounds upon which the motion will be made,[46] and whether it will be made upon affidavits, or the minutes of the court, or a bill of exceptions, or a statement of the case,[47] or which does not specify particular errors of law[48] or insufficiencies of evidence[49] complained of where the motion is made on the minutes of the court. It is sufficient that the notice specify with reasonable clearness and certainty the errors of law or insufficiencies of evidence.[50] A notice is not defective because it states that the motion will be made in two or more ways, and the movant may afterward elect in which way to make it.[51] Grounds not designated in the notice of intention to move are waived. It is necessary for the moving party to state all the grounds on which he intends to rely.[52]

d. Amendment.[53] In some states a notice of intention to move that is fatally defective cannot be amended after time for giving notice has elapsed.[54] In other jurisdictions the notice may be amended even at the hearing,[55] to specify particular errors.[56]

3. Time For Serving and Filing — a. In General. The notice must be given or served within the time fixed by rule or statute;[57] and, if no time is so fixed, within a reasonable time.[58] It must be also filed within the time required by statute.[59] And it seems that the notice must be filed before it is served under some codes.[60]

b. When Time Commences to Run. Under some codes the time limited for giving notice of intention to move begins to run from the date the movant is served with written notice of the decision in a case tried without a jury,[61] unless a waiver of actual notice of the decision by the movant is shown by facts appearing in the records, files, or minutes of the court.[62] Where the court amends its conclusions of law and enters judgment, the time for serving notice by one aggrieved by the amendment runs from the entry of judgment.[63]

c. Extension of Time — (I) By Court. Statutes requiring notice of intention to move for a new trial usually provide that the time of serving and filing the notice may be extended by order of court on proper showing;[64] but any such order must be made before the expiration of the original time limited by the statute.[65] An order extending the time for preparing and serving a statement of the case does not operate to extend the time for serving or filing the time notice of intention to move.[66] And it has been held that an extension of time for moving for a new trial does not extend the time for giving notice of intention.[67] The additional time begins to run from the expiration of the statutory period, unless the order provides otherwise.[68] But if the notice is given within the statutory time, the extension of time cannot affect subsequent proceedings.[69]

(II) By Agreement. The parties may extend the time for serving and filing the notice by written stipulation.[70]

Proof of notice held sufficient.— The obtaining of an order staying execution is record proof of notice of the decision (Gardner v. Stare, 135 Cal. 118, 67 Pac. 5. Compare Biagi v. Howes, 66 Cal. 469, 6 Pac. 100); so is the giving of notice of an intention to move for a new trial (California Imp. Co. v. Baroteau, 116 Cal. 136, 47 Pac. 1018; Thorne v. Finn, 69 Cal. 251, 10 Pac. 414; Girdner v. Beswick, (Cal. 1885) 8 Pac. 11); so is the giving of notice of motion to dismiss the action for failure of the successful party to have judgment entered on the court's findings (Forni v. Yoell, 99 Cal. 173, 33 Pac. 887); and notice of the "decision and judgment heretofore rendered and entered herein" is sufficient "notice of the decision of the court" (Waddingham v. Tubbs, 95 Cal. 249, 30 Pac. 527).

To constitute a waiver of notice of the decision, the party must do some affirmative act pointed out in the statute not necessary to be done until after the notice. Everett v. Jones, (Utah 1907) 91 Pac. 360; Burlock v. Shupe, 5 Utah 428, 17 Pac. 19.

What does not amount to waiver.— But it has been held that an application for time to file a motion and statement for a new trial is not a waiver. Burlock v. Shupe, 5 Utah 428, 17 Pac. 19. A waiver is not inferred by an oral request out of court by the unsuccessful party's attorney that no more costs be made in entering judgment than can be helped. State v. Murphy, 19 Nev. 89, 6 Pac. 840.

Lapse of time.— After fourteen years, the notice of motion is too late, although formal notice of the decision was never given, it appearing that the movant had actual notice of the decision. Gray v. Winder, 77 Cal. 525, 20 Pac. 47.

Where a defendant waived notice of decision by obtaining a stay of proceedings, the right of plaintiff to object because the notice of intention to move was not filed within the statutory time was not impaired by the fact that a co-defendant gave to such defendant a notice of the decision on a subsequent date. 4. Waiver of Notice or Delay. The adverse party may waive want of notice or delay in serving or filing it by filing a counter statement of the case,[71] or by agreeing upon a brief of the evidence or statement of the case, or assisting in the settlement thereof, without reserving or making the objection.[72] But an objection that the notice is out of time is not waived by accepting service thereof with an express reservation of the right to object on that ground, nor by appearing at the settlement of a bill of exceptions, if the objection is again made,[73] and consenting to an extension of time for preparing a statement with an express reservation of the right to object on other grounds is not a waiver of an objection for want of notice.[74] Defects in the notice may be waived by admitting service of the motion and statement without reserving the right to object,[75] or by appearing and resisting the motion on other grounds only,[76] or by participating in the new trial without making the objection.[77] Service of notice of a rule nisi is not waived by counsel for the respondent informing counsel for the movant that a certain day would be suitable for the hearing.[78]

G. Rule Nisi — 1. In General. An application for a rule nisi was formerly the common practice,[79] but it has been superseded quite generally by the motion for a new trial.[80]

2. Requisites and Sufficiency. It should state the grounds upon which a new trial is asked.[81] A rule nisi may be amended either by correcting informalities and defects,[82] or by adding new grounds at any time before the disposition thereof.[83]

H. Motion For New Trial[84]— 1. Requirement of Writing and Signing. Where not otherwise provided by statute or rule of court, a motion for a new trial on the judge's minutes may be made orally in open court.[85] But statutes and court rules generally require all such motions to be in writing,[86] and signed by the movant or his attorney.[87] The motion need not be verified where it is supported by affidavits.[88]

2. Sufficiency in General. Technical informalities and defects do not render a motion invalid, if the purpose and grounds thereof are reasonably clear.[89] Where the movant claims to have been "unavoidably prevented" from making the motion within the usual statutory time, the motion must state facts showing such prevention.[90] A motion need not, because made after the term, definitely show when the judgment was rendered.[91]

3. Statement of Grounds[92] — a. In General. It seems that, in the absence of a statute or rule or order of court requiring it, a motion for a new trial need not state the grounds upon which it is made.[93] And under those codes which provide that the notice of intention to move for a new trial shall state the grounds of the motion and how it will be made, and that the notice or statement shall specify the particular errors or insufficiencies in evidence complained of, a formal written statement of the grounds in the motion may be dispensed with.[94] But, under statutes or rules of court in many jurisdictions, it is necessary to specify clearly the grounds of error in the motion, both for the purpose of a hearing thereof by the trial court, or for the purpose of review by the appellate court,[95] and all the grounds for a new trial, known to exist at the time, should be included in one

Rule of court requiring specification of errors not retroactive.— Missouri, etc., R. Co. v. Smith, 152 Fed. 608, 81 C. C. A. 598.

A general assignment, in a motion for new trial, that the court erred in overruling objections of defendant, will be disregarded, where any one was properly overruled. Startzer v. Clarke, (Nebr. 1901) 95 N. W. 509.

Separate statement of grounds.— A separate statement of the grounds for a new trial need not be filed, unless required by statute or rule of court; and an entry of the grounds in the motion docket following the entry of the motion is sufficient. Dupuis v. Thompson, 16 Fla. 69.

Effect of joint motion for new trial.— Where a verdict is returned against plaintiff and in favor of several defendants on distinct defenses, and a single joint motion for new trial is overruled, the court on appeal is only required to examine the record enough to ascertain the fact that the verdict is good as to any one defendant. Lydick v. Gill, 68 Nebr. 273, 94 N. W. 109.

Where an error assigned does not apply to all the parties against whom the motion is directed, the party to whom it is applicable should be specified. Prescott v. Haughey, 152 Ind. 517, 51 N. E. 1051, 53 N. E. 766.

Statement of exception to ruling unnecessary.— It is unnecessary to follow a specific assignment of error in a motion for a new trial with a statement that the moving party excepts to the ruling so assigned. Prizer-Painter Stove, etc., Co. v. Peaslee, 99 Minn. 275, 109 N. W. 232.

Waiver of objection to specification.—After a new trial has been granted, it is too late to object that a specification of error was too general. Ohio, etc., R. Co. v. Stein, 133 Ind. 243, 31 N. E. 180, 32 N. E. 831, 19 L. R. A. 733; Kloster v. Elliott, 123 Ind. 176, 24 N. E. 99.

Where a motion and "supplemental" motion were filed within the time limited for filing a motion, the latter motion only was considered. Lincoln v. Beckman, 23 Nebr. 677, 37 N. W. 593. Compare Preble v. Bates, 37 Fed. 772.

good understanding what is relied upon,[97] and in others that the motion must be so certain and specific as not to impose upon the court the task of searching the record for alleged erroneous rulings.[98] It is sufficient to state a specific ground for a new trial included within one of the more general causes enumerated by the statute, without expressly alleging the existence of the general cause.[99]

b. Only Grounds Specified Considered. Grounds not stated in the motion or written statement will not be considered at the hearing by the trial court.[1] And

A second application under a distinct statute may be permissible. Bevering v. Smith, (Iowa 1902) 90 N. W. 840.

Remarks of court.— Remarks of the court

the motion or written grounds are filed,[3] but it may be aided by reference to a bill of exceptions already settled and filed.[4]

d. Admission or Exclusion of Evidence.[5] In some jurisdictions it is held that improper rulings in the admission or exclusion of evidence are sufficiently designated as errors of law occurring at the trial and excepted to by the applicant,[6] and in other jurisdictions, as errors of law, duly excepted to, in the admission or exclusion of evidence.[7] So in one state it has been held that a general allegation that the court admitted illegal evidence without specifically pointing out the evidence is sufficient.[8] On the other hand in a number of jurisdictions if error in admitting or rejecting evidence is relied on the evidence improperly admitted or excluded must be specifically designated in the motion for new trial.[9] But it in the jury's presence will not be reviewed on appeal where the court's attention was not called to them in the motion for a new trial. Miller v. Nuckolls, 77 Ark. 64, 91 S. W. 759, 113 Am. Canada.— Crandell v. Nott, 30 U. C. C. P. 63; McDermott v. Ireson, 38 U. C. Q. B. 1.

See 37 Cent. Dig. tit. "New Trial," § 258.

Other parts of record not consulted.— A ground of motion for new trial, complaining of the admission or rejection of evidence, must be complete in itself, or in connection with the exhibits attached to the motion; and the supreme court will not look to any other part of the record to make perfect an incomplete assignment of error in the motion for new trial. Benning v. Horkan, 120 Ga. 734, 48 S. E. 123; Georgia Cent. R. Co. v. McClifford, 120 Ga. 90, 47 S. E. 590; Graham v. Baxley, 117 Ga. 42, 43 S. E. 405; Ellis v. Union Sav. Bank, etc., Co., 115 Ga. 458, 41 S. E. 642.

Assignments held insufficient.— In applying the doctrine stated, the following assignments have been held too general: That "the court erred in admitting incompetent testimony." Bruen v. Grahn, 5 Ky. L. Rep. 313. That "the court below erred in entering judgment for appellant." McGinnis v. Boyd, 144 Ind. 393, 42 N. E. 678. That the verdict is contrary to law. Shirk v. Cartright, 29 Ind. 406. That "the court admitted improper evidence and excluded proper evidence, as shown by bill of exceptions No. 2, herewith filed." Arbuckle v. Biederman, 94 Ind. 168. To the same effect see Queen Ins. Co. v. Studebaker Bros. Mfg. Co., 117 Ind. 416, 20 N. E. 299. So a ground of motion for new trial alleging that the court, after rejecting a certain writing, erred in ruling out "all the other evidence which the defendant has previously introduced which entered into the contents of the paper writing referred to," without specifying of what the evidence thus ruled out consisted, presents no question for review (Tompkins v. Compton, 97 Ga. 375, 23 S. E. 839), and a new trial will not be granted on account of an alleged error in allowing an answer to the question, "How much has . plaintiff's land . . been depreciated . . . over and above the value of the timber cut and taken off by defendant?" where the name of the witness to whom it was put is not given and does not appear in the record, and the motion fails to state the purport of the evidence (Knisely v. Hire, 2 Ind. App. 86, 28 N. E. 195). So it is not sufficient to specify error in admitting the testimony of a certain witness, unless all of his testimony was inadmissible. Logansport, etc., Gas Co. v. Coate, 29 Ind. App. 299, 64 N. E. 638. And a motion for a new trial for the alleged improper exclusion of evidence to impeach a witness by showing contradictory statements made by him must show the testimony sought to be contradicted. Dorsey v. Georgia Cent. R. Co., 113 Ga. 564, 38 S. E. 958.

Assignments held sufficient.— An assignment that the court erred in refusing to permit a witness named to answer the following question, followed by the question asked, was sufficient. Gough v. State, 32 Ind. App. 22, 68 N. E. 1043. On an assignment of excessive damages, the court may consider the inadmissibility of evidence hearing on that subject. Oiler v. Bodkey, 17 Ind. 600.

The withdrawal by the court of evidence admitted conditionally, with a statement to the jury that they should not consider it, is properly designated as a ruling withdrawing evidence rather than as an instruction. Lawler v. McPheeters, 73 Ind. 577.

Aider by bill of exceptions not filed.— A motion for new trial assigning improper mistake the matter alluded to it will be sufficient.[10] In some states the grounds of objection to evidence alleged to have been improperly admitted must be stated.[11] And in one of them it should be alleged that the objection set forth in the motion was made at the time of the erroneous ruling complained of.[12] Where several rulings on the admission or exclusion of evidence are assigned collectively as error, the motion may be overruled if any of the rulings was proper.[13]

e. Instructions to Jury. According to some decisions a ground alleging errors of law, excepted to at the time, in the giving or refusing of instructions to the jury is sufficient.[14] By the weight of authority, however, the particular instruction or instructions improperly given or refused,[15] or the particular errors or omisrulings on evidence cannot be made sufficiently specific by reference to bills of exception not on file when the motion was filed. Burns v. Thompson, 91 Ind. 146; Sutherland v. Hankins, 56 Ind. 343; Cobble v. Tomlinson, 50 Ind. 550; Worthington v. Brown, 48 Ind. 152. See also Waller v. New Milford Eleventh School Dist., 22 Conn. 326, as to insufficient statement of ground of objection.

Exclusion of question and offer of proof.— It has been held that the motion should allege as error both the exclusion of the question asked and the exclusion of the offer to prove the facts which the answer would have proved. Sunnyside Coal, etc., Co. v. Reitz, 14 Ind. App. 478, 39 N. E. 541, 43 N. E. 46.

In Georgia an allegation that the court erred in causing certain evidence to be withheld from the jury without indicating that it was "illegally withheld from the jury against the demand of the applicant" is insufficient. Ponder v. Walker, 107 Ga. 753, 33 S. E. 690.

sions in the charge,[16] must be pointed out with reasonable certainty. In some jurisdictions this may be done by referring to the instructions given or refused by number,[17] or by setting forth the instruction or instructions, the giving or refusing of which is complained of, in the motion for new trial.[18] Each instruction, the giving or refusing of which is complained of as error, should be separately assigned. Assignments held too general.— Within the rule stated in the text the following assignments have been held insufficient on account of their generality: "Errors of law occurring at the trial." Phœnix Ins. Co. v. King, 52 Nebr. 562, 72 N. W. 855. That "the verdict was contrary to the law." McClintock v. Frolich, 75 Ark. 111, 86 S. W. 1001. "That the court erred in instructions to the jury." Horne v. Williams, 23 Ind. 37; Elliott v. Woodward, 18 Ind. 183; Meno v. Hœffel, 46 Wis. 282, 1 N. W. 3. "That the court erred in refusing to give instructions asked by defendant" and "that the court erred in refusing to give instructions to the jury on its own motion." Douglass v. Blankenship, 50 Ind. 160. That "the court misdirected the jury in a material matter of law." Schlicht v. State, 56 Ind. 173. So it has been held that error in instructions, if any, is waived where the motion for new trial states only "that the verdict is not sustained by sufficient evidence, and that it was procured by the fraud of the prevailing party" (Leavenworth, etc., R. Co. v. Whitaker, 42 Kan. 634, 22 Pac. 733), and instructions will not be reviewed where the record does not show whether a general motion on the minutes for a new trial was made on exceptions, or for insufficient evidence, or for excessive damages (Nisbet v. Gill, 38 Wis. 657).

Assignment held sufficient.— That "the court erred in giving instructions, 2, 3, 5, 6, 7, and 8, and each of them asked for by plaintiff." Aultman v. Martin, 49 Nebr. 103, 68 N. W. 340 [overruling Russel v. Rosenbaum, 24 Nebr. 769, 40 N. W. 287].

A specification of error directed to one instruction raises no question as to the correctness of another. Storrs v. Fusselman, 23 Ind. App. 293, 53 N. E. 345; Muldoon v. Meriwether, 79 S. W. 1183, 25 Ky. L. Rep. 2085; Bailey v. Louisville, etc., R. Co., 44 S. W. 105, 19 Ky. L. Rep. 1617.

Assigning as error fragmentary part of charge.— A ground of a motion for a new trial assigning as error a mere fragmentary part of the sentence in the charge, to the effect that if the jury believed certain things, "and if the jury further believed," is too incomplete, and furnishes no ground for reversal. Holland v. Williams, 126 Ga. 617, 55 S. E. 1023.

16. Glaze v. Josephine Mills, 119 Ga. 261, 46 S. E. 99 (as to necessity of charging that instructions were not applicable to facts of case); Georgia Cent. R. Co. v. Goodson, 118 Ga. 833, 45 S. E. 680; Robinson v. Hadley, 14 Ind. 417; Lyons v. Van Gorder, 77 Iowa 600, 42 N. W. 500; Croasdaile v. Hall, 3 Brit. Col. 384; Furlong v. Reid, 12 Ont. Pr. 201; Montgomery v. Dean, 7 U. C. C. P. 513 (in rule nisi); McDermott v. Ireson, 38 U. C. Q. B. 1.

Construction of written contract.— The language of the court in "leaving to the jury" the construction of a portion of a written contract must be pointed out. Kehoe v. Hanley, 95 Ga. 321, 22 S. E. 539.

17. Nofsinger v. Reynolds, 52 Ind. 218; Douglass v. Blankenship, 50 Ind. 160; Behrends v. Beyschlag, 50 Nebr. 304, 69 N. W. 835; Weir v. Burlington, etc., R. Co., 19 Nebr. 212, 26 N. W. 627.

"Instructions numbered one to ——." — An assignment in a motion for a new trial that the court erred in giving instructions "numbered one to —" on behalf of plaintiff was defective as to instructions other than No. 1. Kansas City Southern R. Co. v. Davis, (Ark. 1907) 103 S. W. 603.

18. St. John v. Leyden, 111 Ga. 152, 36 S. E. 610; Georgia Cent. R. Co. v. Bond, 111 Ga. 13, 36 S. E. 299; Wappoo Mills v. Commercial Guano Co., 91 Ga. 396, 18 S. E.

rect in regard to any one of the instructions so grouped, the assignment must fail.[19] In another jurisdiction where specific assignments are required, a general assignment upon a designated portion of the judge's charge will be considered only for the purpose of ascertaining whether or not the particular language complained of states a correct abstract principle of law. If it does the court will not inquire whether the words excepted to are or are not adjusted to the issues and facts of the case.[20]

f. Verdict or Decision Contrary to Law or Evidence — (i) In General. While in one jurisdiction it has been held that an assignment in a motion for a new trial that the verdict or findings are not sustained by sufficient evidence is good,[21] and Aider by bill of exceptions.— An exception to a judgment overruling a motion for a new trial, one of the grounds of the motion being that the entire charge of the court was contrary to law, is not strengthened by specifying in the bill of exceptions the grounds upon which it is claimed that the whole charge was unsound. Assignment held to refer to each paragraph separately.— An assignment of error in a motion for new trial that "the court erred in giving paragraphs 3, 5, 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 12, and 13 of the instructions, and in giving each of them, given by the court on its own motion," is sufficiently specific. The object of requiring specifications of insufficiency of evidence is to bring directly before the mind of the court the particular point the aggrieved party desires to be reviewed, and also to give notice to the adverse party of the point of attack, and thereby enable him to produce any additional evidence tending to support the finding of fact assailed by the specification. Brenot v. Brenot, 102 Cal. 294, 36 Pac. 672.

Applications of rule.— In applying the rule stated in the text the following specifications have been held insufficient: That the verdict "is contrary to the law and the evidence." Erie Tel., etc., Co. v. Grimes, 82 Tex. 89, 17 S. W. 831. "That the verdict is against the evidence." Coleman v. Gilmore, 49 Cal. 340. That "the verdict is contrary to and not supported by the evidence." Degener v. O'Leary, 85 Tex. 171, 19 S. W. 1004; Clark v. Pearce, 80 Tex. 146, 15 S. W. 787. "That the evidence is insufficient to justify the findings and judgment of the court." Taylor v. Holter, 2 Mont. 476. "That the verdict is contrary to the law and the evidence in the case." Ft. Worth, etc., R. Co. v. Osborne, (Tex. Civ. App. 1894) 26 S. W. 274. That the court erred in refusing the prayer of defendant's cross complaint. Petitt v. Petitt, 138 Ind. 597, 38 N. E. 179. "That the verdict is contrary to and unsupported by either the evidence or the law," and that it is "contrary to and against the weight of the evidence." Suggs v. Terry, (Tex. Civ. App. 1896) 34 S. W. 354. "Because the finding is for the plaintiff when it should have been for the defendant." Putnam v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 22 Mo. App. 589.

Limitations of rule.— The court will not refuse to entertain an appeal on the ground of insufficiency of the specifications in regard to the alleged insufficiency of the evidence to support the findings where they are such as may have been sufficient to inform the opposing counsel and the court of the grounds, and the trial court has entertained and passed on the motion for new trial, especially where the transcript shows that all the evidence has been brought up; the statute in regard to such specifications being primarily is no evidence to support it would be sufficient;[24] and it has also been held that a specification of insufficiency of evidence on one issue raises no question as to the sufficiency of the evidence on another issue.[25] So according to the weight of authority a motion for a new trial based on the ground that the verdict or findings are contrary to the law or to the charge of the court must specify particularly wherein the verdict or findings are contrary to the law or to the charge of the court.[26] A motion for a new trial on the ground that the "judgment," not for the trial court. American Type Founders' Co. v. Packer, 130 Cal. 459, 62 Pac. 744. So where the substance of the evidence has been reduced to writing, a specification in a motion for a new trial that the verdict was contrary to the evidence was sufficient. Moneagle v. Livingston, (Ala. 1907) 43 So. 840.

Aider by agreed statement of facts.— Although the specifications in a statement on motion for new trial, of insufficiency of the evidence to justify the decision as to ownership of land involved in an action of ejectment, may be, in themselves considered, too general, yet where all the facts of the case are settled by stipulation of the parties, excepting one specific issue tried, upon which the ownership of the land depended, the specifications are aided by that fact. Tromans v. Mahlman, 92 Cal. 1, 27 Pac. 1094, 28 Pac. 579.

What evidence shows not considered.— Under a specification of the insufficiency of the evidence to support the verdict, the supreme court will not consider what the evidence does show, but only what it does not show, and a specification that the evidence is insufficient because it conclusively shows contributory negligence, etc., will be disregarded. Cain v. Gold Mountain Min. Co., 27 Mont. 529, 71 Pac. 1004.

Nature of pleadings and issues.— Where it is claimed that the verdict is contrary to law and the evidence, the nature of the pleadings and issues should be set forth. Bartlett v. Lewis, 58 Me. 350.

What specifications sufficient.— Specifications of particulars in which the evidence is alleged to be insufficient to sustain the verdict are sufficient if they give the opposite party and the court notice of the matters which will be urged on the hearing. Georgia.— Napier v. Burkett, 113 Ga. 607, 38 S. E. 941; Roberts v. Keeler, 111 Ga. 181, 36 S. E. 617, where the particular holding was that a new trial would not be granted upon the ground that the petition is fatally defective in substance, the remedy for such a defect being by a demurrer before the trial on the merits or by motion in arrest after verdict, the court, however, indicating that it was committed to the rule that a general assignment in a motion for a new trial that the verdict is "contrary to law" is equivalent to no assignment at all, and relied upon Griffin v. Johnson, 84 Ga. 279, 10 S. E. 719, and Jenkins v. State, 50 Ga. 258. In the first of the last two cases cited, it was held that points of law proper as grounds for demurrer ought not to be made first in the appellate court under a ground for new trial that the verdict was contrary to law, and in the second that where a verdict of guilty is rendered in a criminal case and a motion for a new trial is made on the sole ground that the verdict is contrary to law and the evidence and is overruled, the appellate court will not inquire into the sufficiency of the indictment, no such question having been decided by the trial judge. In several cases it is held that an assignment that the verdict is contrary to specified charges is in effect no more than a complaint that the verdict is contrary to law. Pomeroy v. Gershon, 118 Ga. 521, 45 S. E. 415; Palmer Mfg. Co. v. Drewry, 113 Ga. 366, 38 S. E. 837; Mickleberry v. O'Neal, 98 Ga. 42, 25 S. E. 933. This would seem to mean that such an assignment raises no question for decision (see Wilkins v. Grant, 118 Ga. 522, 45 S. E. 415), although in other cases it would seem that the impropriety of such an assignment rested on the fact that it was included in the general ground that the verdict was contrary to law and therefore it was unnecessary to repeat the ground specifically (Rushin v. Tharpe, 88 Ga. 779, 15 S. E. 830; Athens Mfg. Co. v. Rucker, 80 Ga. 291, 4 S. E. 885). And in so far as such assignment seems to be considered for some purpose (see Palmer Mfg. Co. v. Drewry, supra; Atlanta R., etc., Co. v. Walker, 112 Ga. 725, 38 S. E. 107), these cases would not appear to be in entire accord with those cited above which hold that an assignment that a verdict is contrary to law raised no question for decision.

verdict or decision, is contrary to law or the evidence, or is not supported by sufficient evidence, is fatally defective as presenting no ground for new trial.[27]

(II) Amount of Recovery. It has been held that so far as the party against whom the verdict has gone depends upon the circumstances that damages have been allowed in too great or too small a sum, he may rely upon the ground that the verdict is not sustained by the evidence; that even when in the case of excessive damages he is prepared to show that the excess indicates passion or prejudice, in such case he may rely upon either the ground that the evidence does not sustain the verdict, or that the verdict is the result of passion or prejudice,[28] or that the verdict is not warranted by the evidence, or is contrary to law and the evidence;[29] or that there was no evidence authorizing a verdict for compensatory or punitive damages, and that the verdict should have been for nominal damages only.[30] But more generally it would seem that the objection that the damages awarded are excessive or that the jury erred in assessing the amount of the recovery must be specifically alleged;[31] that an objection that the recovery is excessive is not raised by an assignment that the verdict is "contrary to law and

larly,[43] and should allege want of knowledge of the disqualification[44] or misconduct by the applicant or his attorney in time to have applied for relief at the trial.[45]

i. Newly Discovered Evidence.[46] A motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence must, in some states, set out the evidence claimed to have been newly discovered,[47] in order that it may appear that it is material,[48] and not merely cumulative[49] nor impeaching in character;[50] and, if oral, the names of the proposed witnesses should be given.[51] It should be stated that the movant expects to be able to produce such evidence upon a new trial.[52] It must allege that such evidence was not known to the movant before the verdict, and show that he could not, with reasonable diligence, have discovered and produced it at the trial.[53] So the motion must state the particular facts showing the diligence exercised by him before the trial,[54] and the particular time and circumstances of the discovery of the evidence.[55] It is sufficient to state the particular facts as to the accidental discovery of written evidence outside the line of ordinary inquiry, without stating particular acts of diligence used to discover it before the trial.[56]

j. Conclusions of Law. An alleged ground of motion for a new trial that the "decision" of the court is not sustained by sufficient evidence, and that such decision is contrary to law, is insufficient to raise any question as to the sufficiency of the court's conclusions of law.[57]

k. Rulings on Motions For Continuance. An assignment of error in a motion for new trial, "errors of law occurring at the trial, and excepted to at the time," is too general to present for review the action of the trial court in granting a continuance.[58] So an assignment that the court erred in overruling a motion for continuance on account of the absence of some indefinite and uncertain number of defendant's witnesses, none of them being named, is too uncertain and indefinite to present any question for review.[59] On the other hand an assignment that the court erred "in proceeding with the trial of said cause over the objection of the defendant, and while said case was pending and undetermined in the supreme court, as set forth in said defendant's motion for a continuance" is sufficiently definite to authorize the court to review the question whether a continuance should have been granted.[60]

l. Rulings on Motions For Change of Venue. An assignment of "irregularities in the proceedings of the court" or "error of law occurring at the trial, and excepted to by the plaintiffs" or "that the verdict of the jury is not sustained by the evidence" does not authorize the consideration of an exception to a refusal to grant a change of venue.[61]

m. Rulings on Right to Open and Close. A reviewing court will not sustain the ground of a motion for new trial which merely alleges that the trial court "erred in not allowing defendant's attorney to open and conclude."[62]

n. Rulings on Demurrers to Evidence. A ruling of the trial court sustaining a demurrer to the evidence is presented for review by a motion for new trial duly filed which alleges "that the decision of the court is not sustained by sufficient evidence and is contrary to law."[63]

4. Filing. It is usually essential to the validity of a motion for a new trial that it should be filed in the office of the clerk of the trial court and within the time prescribed by law,[64] unless the party is unavoidably prevented from filing the same within such time;[65] and a motion which has not been so filed will be dismissed.[66] Such a rule is equally as imperative in suits in equity as in actions at law.[67] But the actual filing of a written motion or written grounds may be waived by contesting the application on other grounds without objecting to such failure.[68] In some jurisdictions notice of intention to move for a new trial stands for the formal motion, and the latter need not be filed.[69]

5. Amendment. Within the time limited by rule of court or statute for filing a motion for a new trial, it may be amended either by adding additional grounds or by correcting informalities or defects.[70] After that time a motion duly filed may be amended by correcting mere technical defects or adding matters germane to the grounds stated in the original motion.[71] In some jurisdictions new grounds may be added by amendment, although the time for filing an original motion has expired.[72] In other jurisdictions nothing can be so added that is not germane

Statute mandatory.— A statute requiring a motion for new trial to be filed within ten days after the verdict or decision is rendered is mandatory. Todd v. Peterson, 13 Wyo. 513, 81 Pac. 878.

Where a motion has been regularly indorsed as filed, but not entered on the minutes or the record, an order, at the next term, to correct the omission nunc pro tunc is proper. Gilmore v. Harp, 92 Mo. App. 386. But where a motion for a new trial was not filed with the clerk of the proper county within the time required, by reason of the mere inadvertence of defendant's attorneys, the court had no power at a subsequent term to enter an order directing the filing of the motion nunc pro tunc. Todd v. Peterson, 13 Wyo. 513, 81 Pac. 878.

Where a motion for new trial has been continued until next term by agreement of the parties, it will be considered filed in time, although it did not come into the hands of the clerk until a few moments after the announcement of the adjournment for the term. Glover v. Ratcliff, 69 Kan. 428, 77 Pac. 89.

Leaving the motion in the office of the judge in the care of his special bailiff is not a filing. New England Mortg. Security Co. v. Collins, 115 Ga. 104, 41 S. E. 270.

Necessity that clerk be in office.— It is not absolutely necessary that the clerk, when he marks a motion filed, should be in his office in order to perfect the filing, provided the same be done in good faith by the clerk, and not in such a manner or under such circumstances as to work an injury to other parties. Hammock v. May, 38 Tex. 196.

Filing of copy.— Rules of court in some states provide that a copy of a motion for a new trial shall be filed at the same time as the original, and if this is not done, the motion may be stricken from the files, although the copy is filed before it is called for by the adverse party. Burgit v. Case, 84 Iowa 33, 50 N. W. 218.

to grounds stated in the original motion,[73] except, it may be, grounds that the movant was unavoidably prevented from including therein.[74]

6. Certification or Verification of Motion For Purposes of Review — a. Necessity. In some jurisdictions the statutes require certification or verification of the grounds of motion for new trial. Thus in Georgia it is held that grounds of motion for new trial not approved by the court or verified will not be considered on exceptions to the order overruling the motion.[75] In the absence of such verification the supreme court will consider only whether the verdict is contrary to the law and evidence,[76] and where all but one of the grounds of a motion are certified by the judge to be incorrect, that ground only will be considered on appeal.[77] In California a statement or motion for new trial not certified as correct by the judge or the parties will not be considered on appeal.[78] So it has been held in Nebraska that a paper included in the transcript, purporting to be a motion for new trial, will be disregarded unless authenticated by the certificate of the clerk.[79]

Motion for new trial on ground of misconduct.— Under a statutory provision (Code Civ. Proc. § 658) to the effect that a motion for new trial on the ground of misconduct of the jury shall be made on affidavits, a motion made on the statement of the case is unauthorized. It has also been held under this statute that where a deputy sheriff having charge of the jury refuses to make an affidavit his deposition in open court must be taken as equivalent to such affidavit. Saltzman v. Sunset Tel., etc., Co., 125 Cal. 501, 58 Pac. 169.

79. Hake v. Woolner, 55 Nebr. 471, 75

Under a statute of Montana providing that, if the amendments to the statement on motion for new trial prepared by the adverse party are not adopted, the proposed statement and amendments shall, within ten days thereafter, be presented by the moving party to the judge, or delivered to the clerk for the judge, the court must disregard, on appeal, the statement and all questions sought to be presented thereby, when the moving party has failed to comply with such requirement.[80]

b. Sufficiency. A ground of a motion for new trial will not be held to be verified when the record is silent on the subject; when the record discloses an affirmative refusal to verify, and when the judge appends to the motion a note which states facts in conflict with any statement in the ground which would be material in the consideration of the errors complained of.[81] The granting of a rule nisi for a new trial and entry thereof upon the minutes, even with the order that the rule operate as supersedeas, will not authenticate matters of fact alleged in the motion for a new trial;[82] and an approval of a motion qualified by the statement that the ground therein stated should be corrected by reference to the charge appended to the motion is not a sufficient certification. The judge should either make the grounds speak the exact truth or refuse to certify their correctness.[83] A statement by the trial judge that he does not remember the ground of motion as stated by counsel, but that counsel is so confident of it that he, the judge, dislikes to disapprove it, is in effect a disapproval.[84] On the other hand entering the word "Approval" on the motion and signing the same is a sufficient verification;[85] and it has been held that the successor of the judge who presided at the trial may authenticate to the supreme court the grounds taken before himself in a motion for new trial.[86] Where it appears from the record on appeal that the failure of the court to charge a certain principle of law was presented in support of a motion for new trial, considered and overruled, and that the entire charge delivered to the jury had been approved by the judge, and was at that time a part of the record, and, from an examination thereof, it is manifest that the court did not give in charge that principle, such facts, taken together, will be considered by the appellate court as a sufficient verification of that ground.[87] In Montana a certification of the motion as correct by the attorneys instead of the judge is insufficient.[88]

I. Petition, Complaint, or Statutory Action For New Trial After the Term[89] — 1. Necessary Requisites, and Sufficiency — a. In General. In many states an application for new trial after the term must be by petition or com-

Motion marked "allowed," insufficient.— An amendment to a motion for new trial, which has an entry to the effect that it was allowed by the judge, with nothing else to show an approval of its grounds, is not sufficiently verified to authorize the supreme court to deal with assignments of error therein: approval does not follow from mere allowance of an amendment. (II) Errors and Irregularities. Where the application is made on the ground of errors or irregularities in the proceedings, verdict, or judgment, they must be alleged specifically,[5] and it must be shown that such errors or irregularities were prejudicial to the applicant.[6] The evidence need not be set forth where it is not material in the determination of the grounds alleged.[7] But a petition for a new trial on the ground of erroneous instructions should state the testimony or its purport with sufficient fullness to show that the alleged error was prejudicial.[8]

(III) Accident or Surprise. A petition or complaint for a new trial for accident or surprise must state the particular facts showing the accident or surprise.[9] It must state facts showing that the accident or surprise could not have been guarded against by ordinary prudence.[10] Where a new trial is asked for because of the absence of witnesses, the facts showing the diligence used to secure their attendance must be set out.[11] Where a new trial is asked because of the absence from the trial of defendant the petition or complaint must set out a meritorious defense if none was pleaded.[12] A petition for a new trial for accident or misfortune preventing a review of the case in the supreme court must show the utmost diligence to secure such review.[13]

evidence must be stated in direct and positive terms.[15] In some states it must be set out in full,[16] but in other states it is sufficient to state the substance of it.[17] The names of the witnesses must be given.[18] The petition or complaint must show that the evidence was discovered since the verdict,[19] and too late to be taken advantage of by a motion during the term.[20] It must show that, by the exercise of reasonable diligence, the new evidence could not have been discovered before the trial,[21] or after the trial in time to have applied for a new trial by motion,[22] and must state the particular facts showing diligence before[23] and after the trial.[24] It must show affirmatively that it has been filed within the time provided by law,[25] and promptly after the discovery of the new evidence.[26]

Sufficiency of demurrer. — A demurrer stating that the complaint "does not contain and set forth sufficient facts to enable the plaintiffs to sustain said action" is sufficient. Stanley v. Peeples, 13 Ind. 232. Matters not admitted by demurrer. — A de-demurrer thereto has been sustained is not error where the record does not show any application for leave to amend.[31]

3. AMENDMENT. The petition or complaint may be amended before or after demurrer as in other cases.[32] An amended petition filed after the dismissal of the original petition has no standing in court, either as an amendment or as a petition, since the relief it seeks is res judicata by the judgment on the original petition.[33] Where the ground for a new trial set up in the original petition is insufficient, a sufficient ground cannot be added by amendment after the time within which the petition should have been filed.[34]

4. EVIDENCE ON THE HEARING. On the trial of the issues under the petition or complaint, the issues in the original trial should be proved by the record, the evidence adduced thereat by competent evidence, and the new evidence and the facts relating to its discovery by oral testimony or depositions as in other cases.[35] It is sufficient to prove alleged surprise, accident, mistake, or fraud without proving the defense sufficiently pleaded in the action.[36]

J. Minutes of the Court[37] — 1. IN GENERAL. The term "minutes of the court" seems to have no well defined legal meaning, but is evidently used as referring to the judge's recollection of the evidence and rulings and to such minutes thereof as he may have made.[38] Where the motion is not heard at the circuit where made, the judge's minutes may be required.[39] Where the judge's minutes are not accessible and the minutes of the attorney who tried the case are used, they should be verified.[40]

2. MOTION ON THE MINUTES — a. In General. Under the statutes of some states[41] a new trial may be granted on the judge's minutes upon exceptions; or because the verdict is for excessive or insufficient damages,[42] or otherwise contrary to the evidence,[43] or contrary to law.[44] Such a motion can be made only on the grounds specified in the statute,[45] which does not include surprise,[46] or the refusal of the murrer to a motion does not admit the general allegation that the judgment is erroneous. Etchells v. Wainwright, 76 Conn. 534, 57 Atl. 121. court to allow counsel sufficient time to sum up the case to the jury.[47] Neither is a motion on the minutes of the court authorized, where the trial was by the court without a jury,[48] nor where the complaint was dismissed on plaintiff's own showing.[49]

b. Time For Application and Hearing. A motion for a new trial on the judge's minutes must be made,[50] and heard and decided,[51] at the term at which the trial is had. When the hearing of a motion for a new trial on the judge's minutes is continued, by consent, beyond the term, it becomes a motion for a new trial on the record; and although, on the hearing of such a motion, where no bill of exceptions has been settled, the testimony given at the trial cannot be considered, yet the objection must be taken at the hearing or it will be held to have been waived.[52]

K. Bill of Exceptions, Case, or Statement of Case[53] — 1. Necessity For[54] — a. In General. When a motion for a new trial is made on the minutes of the court which tried the case, neither a bill of exceptions,[55] nor a statement of the case,[56] is necessary. Where, however, a motion for a new trial is required by statute to be heard upon a bill of exceptions or statement of the case, or where the notice of intention to move for a new trial specifies that the motion will be made upon a bill of exceptions or statement, a new trial will be denied unless such bill of exceptions or statement is prepared and settled.[57] In some states a motion for a new trial on an issue of fact is required to be made on a case settled and signed by the trial judge. A motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence is one involving an issue of fact within such requirement.[58]

b. Waiver. That a motion is one which properly should not have been made on the minutes[59] or on affidavits[60] is waived, in some states, by arguing the motion on the merits without objection to the form of the application.

2. Requisites and Sufficiency in General — a. Bill of Exceptions.[61] A bill of exceptions must contain all the evidence necessary to a determination of the question raised by the motion for a new trial.[62] And some courts require oral testimony taken by way of question and answer to be reduced to narrative form.[63] Under the code of Montana where a motion for new trial is made on a bill of exceptions, the motion is not objectionable for failure of such bill to contain a specification of errors of law and insufficiencies of evidence as are found in a statement of the case.[64]

b. Statement of Case — (i) Evidence. A statement of the case should contain so much of the evidence as is necessary to a proper determination of the grounds presented by the notice or motion and no more.[65] The statement should contain all the evidence where it is claimed that the verdict is against the weight of the evidence or that the damages awarded are excessive,[66] or where it is claimed that the instructions were not relevant to the evidence.[67] To sustain the action of the trial court, it will be presumed that the statement contains all the evidence offered on the question involved.[68]

(ii) Specification of Errors of Law and Insufficiencies of Evidence. Where a new trial is demanded for errors of law occurring at the trial or for

Bank v. Roberts, 9 Mont. 323, 23 Pac. 718. A specification that the court erred in rendering judgment for defendant is too general. Lower Kings River Reclamation Dist. No. 531 v. Phillips, 108 Cal. 306, 39 Pac. 630, 41 Pac. 335. Error in assessing the amount of the recovery may be shown under a statement of ground that the verdict is contrary to law or not sustained by sufficient evidence. Du Brutz v. Jessup, 54 Cal. 118. It was formerly held insufficient to say that any certain finding was not sustained by sufficient evidence, unless the finding was of a probative fact as distinguished from an ultimate fact. De Molera v. Martin, 120 Cal. 544, 52 Pac. 825; Parker v. Reay, 76 Cal. 103, 18 Pac. 124; Heilbron v. Centerville, etc., Irr. Ditch Co., 76 Cal. 8, 17 Pac. 932; Eddelbuttel v. Durrell, 55 Cal. 277; Finlan v. Heinze, 28 Mont. 548, 73 Pac. 123. But at the present time a specification is sufficient when it points to a particular finding; or if the motion is directed against a general verdict, or an omnibus finding, which states that all or certain designated allegations of the complaint or answer are true. Harris v. Duarte, 141 Cal. 497, 70 Pac. 298, 75 Pac. 58; Holmes v. Hoppe, 140 Cal. 212, 73 Pac. 1002 (holding the recent rule to be more liberal); Gillies v. Clarke Fork Coal Min. Co., 32 Mont. 320, 80 Pac. 370. A specification is sufficient which recites that "the foregoing constitutes substantially all the evidence given upon the trial." Di Nola v. Allison, 143 Cal. 106, 76 Pac. 976, 101 Am. St. Rep. 84, 65 L. R. A. 419; Standard Quicksilver Co. v. Habishaw, 132 Cal. 115, 64 Pac. 113. "That the court erred in giving to the jury the instructions as set forth in this statement" is a sufficient specification of error, where the instructions were written and given as one continuous charge. Ellis v. Central Pac. R. Co., 5 Nev. 255. A statement is not fatally defective for failure to arrange specifications of error separately under appropriate headings. Gillies v. Clarke Fork Coal Min. Co., 32 Mont. 320, 80 Pac. 370. A specification in a statement of the case showing insufficiency of evidence to support a finding of fact is not to be disregarded because it is classified as an error of law. The statement need not be served on all the attorneys of the adverse parties, if served on attorneys representing each party. Walsh v. Mueller, 14 Mont. 76, 35 Pac. 226.

Service of original draft.— Service by leaving the original draft with the attorney of the adverse party, who returns it, is sufficient. Wulf v. Manuel, 9 Mont. 276, 279, 286, 23 Pac. 723.

Proof of service.— Service may be proved either by indorsement of acceptance of service or by affidavit of the person making the within the time fixed by the rule of court or statute.[75] Unless the proposed statement is filed within the time limited by statute or rule of court,[76] or within any extension of time that may have been granted by the court,[77] or stipulated by the parties,[78] a new trial will be denied.

b. Extension of Time. The statutes generally provide that the court may extend the time for serving or filing a statement;[79] but where they limit the period of extension, the courts cannot grant an extension for a greater period than that designated.[80] That the parties have extended the time by stipulation does not limit the further time that may be given by order of court.[81] But extension of time by stipulation of parties after an extension of time by the court does not authorize the court to grant further extension which exceeds the total time which the court

Objections to the statement for want of timely service thereof should be made when it is presented for settlement rather than at the hearing on the motion. Cole v. Wilcox, 99 Cal. 549, 34 Pac. 114.

Striking from files.—A statement settled, certified, and filed should not be stricken from the record or files because it was not served in time; but a new trial should be denied if the objection has not been waived. Beach v. Spokane Ranch, etc., Co., 25 Mont. 367, 65 Pac. 106.

Consent to an order extending the time, it seems, is not equivalent to a stipulation of parties. Desmond v. Faus, (Cal. 1893) 33 Pac. 457.

might have granted in the first instance.[82] Ordinarily an order extending the time must be made before the expiration of the time given by the statute or the additional time given by some prior order or agreement of the parties.[83] But the parties may agree to an extension of time even after the right to serve or file a statement has been lost.[84] Where the time for serving and filing a statement begins to run from the giving of notice of intention to move for a new trial, extending the time for giving notice operates to extend the time for serving and filing the statement.[85] But extending the time to move for a new trial does not of itself extend the time for filing the statement.[86] The order for extension should be signed by the judge and filed with the papers in the case or entered of record in the minutes of the court within the time prescribed by statute.[87] Mistakes in the order which could not mislead the opposite party do not vitiate it.[88] The extension runs from the date of the order,[89] and includes the day "to" which it is granted.[90] An improper extension of time must be objected to when the order is made.[91]

c. Waiver of Delay. If the adverse party joins in the settlement of a statement without objecting to it as having been filed out of time, the irregularity is waived.[92] But the right to object at the hearing that the notice and statement were not served or filed in proper time is not waived by proposing amendments to the statement with a preface that such party does so without prejudice to his right to so object.[93]

4. Settlement of Statement of Case. In the absence of any statutory provision fixing the time for presentation of a proposed statement to the judge for settlement, it may be presented within a reasonable time.[94] If, however, the time for presenting a proposed statement to the judge for settlement is prescribed by statute the statutory requirement must be complied with,[95] or the court may refuse to settle the statement or may settle it and deny a new trial.[96] Where, however, the timely settlement of a statement is prevented by the adverse party, the right to a settlement is not thereby lost.[97] And it seems that the statement may be settled after the expiration of the statutory time where the movant has not been guilty of laches.[98] An order of court extending the time must be made ordinarily before the expiration of the usual statutory time.[99] It is the duty of the court to settle a proposed statement in all cases where the attorneys are unable to agree to it as filed, no matter what reasons exist which render them unable to agree to it,[1] on due notice to the parties.[2] It has been held, in several states, that the ruling of the trial court on the motion for a new trial will not be reviewed on appeal, unless the statement was settled before the ruling was made;[3] but in other states it has been held that the trial court need not "use" the statement on the hearing of the motion.[4] The statement must show on its face that it was agreed to by the parties,[5] or allowed by the judge.[6] And when duly filed and settled should not be stricken from the files or corrected except on proper showing of mistake therein.[7] On appeal from the denial of a motion, under some codes, the statement must be signed and certified by the judge, even though it is certified by the parties to be correct.[8] But it has been held that the failure to agree upon or settle a statement may be waived by arguing the motion without objection on that ground.[9]

5. Amendment of Statement of Case. In some states statutes fix the time within which a statement must be amended.[10] Within such time it may be amended by adding the grounds of the motion, where it already contains the specifications of errors of law or insufficiency of evidence,[11] or by adding the specifications where it already designates the grounds,[12] or by making additional specifications.[13]

App. 673, 58 S. E. 54, holding that a brief of the evidence is an indispensable requisite to a valid motion for a new trial, although the verdict be directed by the court and be based on grounds not requiring a consideration of the evidence.

A brief filed by one of two defendants may be considered on separate motions filed by the evidence;[16] but it does not apply where a new trial is asked for because of the necessary absence from the trial of the moving party.[17]

2. REQUISITES AND SUFFICIENCY. On an application for a new trial under the Georgia practice a brief of the evidence in the cause must be filed by the party applying for such new trial,[18] under the revision and approval of the court,[19] or by agreement of counsel,[20] and such approval or agreement must appear on the minutes.[21] The brief of the evidence need not be entered on the minutes of the court,[22] or be recorded by the clerk.[23] Such entry may be made, however, and the revision of and approval by the court will be inferred therefrom.[24] The best mode of making out a brief of the testimony is to embody in it an abstract of the oral and a copy of the written evidence.[25] It is not sufficient to merely refer to evidence not actually incorporated in or appended to the brief.[26] Only such evidence as is material upon the questions raised by the motion is required,[27] and a such defendant and plaintiff. McLain v. Wooten, 96 Ga. 331, 23 S. E. 189.

16. Georgia R. Co. v. Mitchell, 75 Ga. 144.

17. Audulph v. Josey, 44 Ga. 605.

18. White v. Newton Mfg. Co., 38 Ga. 587; Spears v. Smith, 7 Ga. 436. And see supra, preceding section.

Evidence of filing.— A certificate of the clerk, entered upon the brief at the time it is filed, is the best evidence of such filing, but it is not necessary evidence. Other evidence may be properly admitted to prove such paper was filed. Peterson v. Taylor, 15 Ga. 483, 60 Am. Dec. 705.

Waiver.— The failure to have the brief of evidence on a motion for new trial marked "Filed in office" by the clerk is waived by arguing the motion on its merits. Laslie v. Laslie, 94 Ga. 720, 19 S. E. 805.

19. Bliss v. Stevens, 13 Ga. 403; Tomlinson v. Cox, 8 Ga. 111; Spears v. Smith, 7 Ga. 436; Graddy v. Hightower, 1 Ga. 252.

The signing by the judge of an entry on the brief of evidence on a motion for a new trial that it was "agreed to" is in effect an approval of the brief. Laslie v. Laslie, 94 Ga. 720, 19 S. E. 805. But an indorsement by the judge on a brief of evidence that, six months having elapsed, he was unable to certify whether it was correct or not, although he recognized the correctness of portions of it, is not. Brown v. Groover, 65 Ga. 238.

Approval before filing.— An order giving defendant thirty days to file a brief of evidence, "subject to the approval of the court and revision of counsel" does not require the approval of the brief before it is filed; and, if filed within the time prescribed, it is error, on the call of the motion for a new trial, to dismiss it because the brief of evidence has not been approved. Randle v. Stone, 75 Ga. 887.

Presumptive approval.— On a motion for a new trial, the granting of a rule nisi is presumptive of approval of the brief of the evidence. Worsham v. Murchison, 66 Ga. 715; Spencer v. Smith, 60 Ga. 537; Vanover v. Turner, 41 Ga. 577.

Partial or qualified approval insufficient.— The trial judge is limited to an approval of the brief, as it is finally made up, and an approval of a brief which contemplates an addition thereto is not such an approval as is required by law (Brantley v. Meyer, 111 Ga. 693, 36 S. E. 924; Georgia R. Co. v. Mitchell, 75 Ga. 144; Erie City Iron Works v. Angier, 66 Ga. 634; Turner v. Wilcox, 65 Ga. 299. See also Freeman v. Macon Door, etc., Co., 92 Ga. 407, 17 S. E. 627), unless after the additions are made the judge again approves either the brief of evidence as a whole, or the additions which have been made thereto (Brantley v. Meyer, 111 Ga. 693, 36 S. E. 924; Royce v. Gazan, 76 Ga. 79; Georgia R. Co. v. Mitchell, 75 Ga. 144; Turner v. Wilcox, 65 Ga. 299).

20. Necessity of approval by court after agreement by counsel.— It has been decided in one case that a brief of evidence must be approved by the presiding judge, although it has been agreed on by counsel. Porter v. State, 56 Ga. 530. There are numerous cases, however, in which it is implied that the agreement of counsel is sufficient. Vanover v. Turner, 41 Ga. 577; Hamilton v. Conyers, 25 Ga. 158; Bliss v. Stevens, 13 Ga. 403; Hardin v. Decatur County Inferior Ct., 10 Ga. 93; Tomlinson v. Cox, 8 Ga. 111; Spears v. Smith, 7 Ga. 436; Graddy v. Hightower, 1 Ga. 252.

A memorandum moved by the counsel who made the motion is not sufficient. Bliss v. Stevens, 13 Ga. 403.

22. Spears v. Smith, 7 Ga. 436.

23. White v. Newton Mfg. Co., 38 Ga. 587.

24. Snelling v. Dorrell, 15 Ga. 507.

25. Tomlinson v. Cox, 8 Ga. 111.

26. Brantley v. Meyer, 111 Ga. 693, 36 S. E. 924; Bliss v. Stevens, 13 Ga. 403 (declaring, however, a reference to a record on file in the court sufficient where sanctioned by agreement or the approval of the court); Tomlinson v. Cox, 8 Ga. 111 (although the presiding judge certified that he recognized such papers as in court before him on the hearing of the motion).

Oral evidence not incorporated in the brief cannot be considered. Ocean Steamship Co. v. Krauss, 62 Ga. 175.

27. Hamilton v. Conyers, 25 Ga. 158.

mere copy of the stenographic notes is not a proper brief.[28] But the fact that the brief contains some superfluous matter furnishes no ground for dismissing the motion.[29] If such an improper brief is approved by the court, a motion to vacate such approval is the proper method of objection.[30]

3. Filing and Approval. Usually the brief must be filed within the time limited by statute, or rule of court,[31] unless that time has been extended by rule or order of court made within the time fixed by the statute or a previous order,[32] in which event it must be filed within the time so extended,[33] unless good excuse

E. 88; Hardison v. Burr, 73 Ga. 125; Stone v. Taylor, 63 Ga. 309.

An order granting leave for filing after term must be clear and unequivocal. Barnes v. Macon, etc., R. Co., 105 Ga. 495, 30 S. E. 883.

What does not amount to extension.— An order continuing the hearing of the motion for a new trial does not, by mere implication, extend the time for presenting the brief (Cohen v. Lester, 103 Ga. 565, 29 S. E. 823; Watson v. Long, 94 Ga. 255, 21 S. E. 507; West v. Smith, 90 Ga. 284, 15 S. E. 912; Milner v. Burrus, 85 Ga. 642, 11 S. E. 1029; Cotton v. Slaughter, 69 Ga. 735. See also Durden v. Trubee, 94 Ga. 725, 20 S. E. 5, where right to object was reserved), unless the movant had previously been given until the hearing to present it (Hightower v. Brazeal, 101 Ga. 371, 29 S. E. 18; Central R., etc., Co. v. Curtis, 87 Ga. 416, 13 S. E. 757; Maynard v. Head, 78 Ga. 190, 1 S. E. 273; Williams v. Georgia Cent. R. Co., 77 Ga. 612, 3 S. E. 88. See also Richmond, etc., R. Co. v. Buice, 88 Ga. 180, 14 S. E. 205; Crockett v. Roebuck, 77 Ga. 16, as to compliance with order), neither does an order giving further time to perfect a motion for a new trial amount to an extension of time (Barnes v. Macon, etc., R. Co., 105 Ga. 495, 30 S. E. 883; Cohen v. Lester, 103 Ga. 565, 29 S. E. 823).

Construction of order.— Where an order continuing the hearing of a motion for a new trial is susceptible of a construction which would allow the movant to prepare and file a brief of the evidence on the day to which the hearing is continued, and of a construction which would not preserve this right, this court will adopt that construction of the order which is placed upon it by the judge at the final hearing, when he dismisses the motion for a new trial because no brief of evidence was filed when the motion was first called. Brown v. Richards, 114 Ga. 318, 40 S. E. 224.

Extension in vacation.— The time cannot be extended in vacation except by an order on the day set for the hearing. Blackburn v. Alabama Midland R. Co., 116 Ga. 936, 43 S. E. 366.

for failure is shown.[34] And no further extension will in any event be granted where the movant has been guilty of laches.[35] For extraordinary reasons leave to file a brief of the evidence may be given after the expiration of the usual time.[36] The brief must be approved by the court.[37] Although no time is absolutely limited for such approval,[38] the court may refuse to approve it after long delay.[39]

4. WAIVER OF DELAY. The filing of a brief out of time may be waived by agreeing to its approval, or participating in its revision or arguing the motion on the merits without objection to such irregularity.[40]

What approval sufficient.— The revision and approval of the brief may be inferred from its entry on the minutes. Snelling v. Dorrell, 15 Ga. 507. The granting of a rule nisi is a presumptive approval of the brief. Worsham v. Murchison, 66 Ga. 715 (and a direct approval may be made at the hearing by a different judge); Spencer v. Smith, 60 Ga. 537; Vanover v. Turner, 41 Ga. 577. The signing of an entry "agreed to" on the brief by the judge is a sufficient approval. Laslie v. Laslie, 94 Ga. 720, 19 S. E. 805.

Approval held insufficient.—An entry made by the presiding judge on a brief of evidence presented with a motion for a new trial, in the following language: "The within brief of evidence is hereby approved as correct, subject to such additions as either side may desire as taken from entries on the fieri facias mentioned herein, as the fi. fas. are not now accessible," did not serve as a legal approval of the brief of evidence. Brantley v. Meyer, etc., Co., 111 Ga. 693, 36 S. E. 924.

Approval before filing.— An order giving time to file a brief of evidence "subject to the approval of the court" does not require the approval of the brief before it is filed. Randle v. Stone, 75 Ga. 887.

5. AMENDMENT. A brief of evidence may be amended at any time while the motion for a new trial is pending,[41] by substituting for it a proper and correct brief duly made out and signed by the judge,[42] or a more condensed statement of its material contents,[43] or by adding matter improperly omitted from the document when it was approved as a complete brief.[44]

M. Report of Evidence. In some states a report of the evidence prepared by the trial judge must be submitted with the motion when it is to be passed upon by an appellate court, or full bench.[45] Where it is claimed that the verdict is contrary to the evidence, the report must contain all the evidence.[46] The report must be filed as required by rule of court or statute.[47] An order extending the time for filing a transcript of the evidence under the statutes of one jurisdiction cannot be made after the time already granted has expired, at least where the delay is due to carelessness rather than to accident, mistake, or unforeseen cause.[48]

N. Affidavits and Extrinsic Evidence[49] — 1. IN GENERAL. In general an application for a new trial upon any ground not shown by the record, or the minutes of the court,[50] or a bill of exceptions or statement of the case, must be supported by affidavits,[51] and ordinarily the affidavits must be direct and positive and not on information and belief.[52] In other cases, however, as where the motion is based upon an alleged error in rulings upon the admission or rejection of evidence, in misdirection or refusal to instruct upon request, or because the verdict is against the law or the evidence, supporting affidavits are not necessary;[53] but on the contrary, in such cases the court is confined to the evidence which was introduced upon the trial and cannot admit or consider any other testimony,[54]

either in support of the motion,[55] or in support of the verdict and for the purpose of defeating an order for a new trial.[56] Therefore affidavits explaining or qualifying the evidence given at the trial,[57] or in support of the verdict,[58] or motion, will not be received in such cases.[59] So whether a verdict is excessive is to be determined solely from a consideration of the evidence in the case and whether it will clearly sustain the conclusion of the jury — a question which cannot be aided by the showing of extrinsic facts by affidavit or otherwise, and therefore affidavits in support of a motion based upon this ground are not necessary;[60] the affidavits of witnesses will not be received either to explain or to add to evidence given by them at the trial,[61] and error cannot be predicated upon the granting of a new trial for excessiveness in the verdict, because the order is granted without supporting affidavits.[62]

2. Oral Testimony and Written Evidence. On the hearing of a motion for a new trial, on which evidence dehors the record is admissible, it is a matter within the discretion of the court whether it will receive oral testimony,[63]

On a case made it has been held that where the party relies on some defect in the proofs which is afterward discovered to be material, it is within the discretion of the court to permit such evidence to be supplied when it is of such a nature that no dispute or conflict of testimony can arise upon it, as in the case of a judgment, recorded deed, or other document. 3. General Rules As to The Making and Filing of Affidavits — a. Compelling the Making of Affidavits. In some states, under statutes, persons may be compelled to make affidavits as to relevant facts within their knowledge to be used on the hearing of an application for a new trial.[67] As a rule at least jurors cannot be required to make such affidavits[68] to prove their misconduct.[69]

b. Competency of Affiants. A party to the action[70] or his attorney is usually a competent affiant, on an application for a new trial, as to any fact of which he has knowledge.[71] Nevertheless, it has been held that the affidavit of any other person is admissible to prove a fact to which he would not be competent to testify on the trial.[72]

But in Whitmore v. Ball, 9 Lea (Tenn.) 35, where the right to impeach a verdict for improper conduct of jurors is recognized, it is held that upon an affidavit by the unsuccessful party showing such conduct on the part of a juror and the refusal of jurors to give affidavits it is the duty of the court to examine the jurors orally in court at the instance of the party complaining, and it is error to refuse such examination as improper in the absence of affidavits by the jurors themselves.

c. Preparing, Serving, and Filing — (I) In General. In the absence of a statute or rule of court to the contrary, affidavits in support of a motion for a new trial need not be served or filed before the hearing of the motion.[73] Under statutes and rules of court in some jurisdictions, affidavits must be filed by a certain time,[74] or at least within a reasonable time,[75] and evidence in support of a motion for a new trial must be taken within the time limited by order of court.[76]

(II) Extension of Time. The time for filing affidavits may be extended by order of court,[77] or leave may be given to file out of time affidavits prepared in due time, but not filed through inadvertence.[78] The refusal to postpone the hearing of a motion for a new trial in order that supporting affidavits might be secured and prepared will not be disturbed where nothing was presented to a court from which it might have been able to determine or be informed that it was in the power of the party to produce the necessary affidavits to sustain the reasons assigned for the new trial.[79]

d. Amendment of Affidavits. An affidavit may be amended while the motion is still pending.[80]

tained by affidavits.[82] In some states a motion based on the improper argument of counsel should be made on affidavits;[83] but in other states such misconduct must be shown by the minutes or a bill of exceptions.[84] The affidavits should state the facts relied on positively and definitely,[85] and should show that the irregularity was not known by either of them in time to make objection thereto at the trial,[86] and was prejudicial.[87]

5. Disqualification or Misconduct of or Affecting Jurors[88] — a. In General. A motion for a new trial on the ground of disqualification or misconduct of jurors or of misconduct of other persons affecting the jury must be sustained by affidavits.[89] But it has been held that in order to take advantage of the fact that a juror had, in advance of the trial, expressed an opinion upon the merits of the case, it must appear of record that the juror was examined as to whether he had formed or expressed such an opinion or belief, and that a showing thereof by affidavit is not sufficient.[90]

b. Affidavit of Applicant or Attorney — (i) The Surprise, Accident, or Mistake. The particular facts showing surprise, accident, or mistake must be proved by the affidavit of the applicant or his attorney.[45]

(ii) Prudence. The affidavits must show that the accident or surprise could not have been guarded against by ordinary prudence.[46] The particular facts offered as an excuse for the absence from the trial of the applicant or his counsel must be stated,[47] and the acts of diligence to discover and produce necessary wit-

305. See also Page v. Wheeler, 5 N. H. 91. While testimony that the jury wholly ignored certain evidence before them might tend to sustain their verdict in some cases, it would show that they violated their oath in not trying the case according to the law and the evidence given them, and would come within the rule making the testimony of jurors incompetent to impeach their verdict. Mason v. Knox, supra.

If the evidence is in writing and has not been read in the presence of the jury, and was not placed in their possession through fault of the winning party or negligence of the losing party, it may be shown by the testimony of jurors that they did not read it, or have knowledge of its contents. Affidavits without case.—An application for a new trial upon the ground of newly discovered evidence is peculiar in its nature, and, unlike other motions for new trials, depends mainly upon intrinsic facts, and not upon errors committed upon the trial. It must therefore necessarily be founded, in part if not wholly, upon affidavits and other proof. There is no other mode of bringing the material facts involved in such a motion, viz., the existence of the newly discovered proof; the time and circumstances of its discovery; the names of the witnesses by whom it is to be established, and the exercise of diligence in making it, before the court. The character of other facts which may be important in considering the motion, such, for instance, as whether the evidence is cumulative, or relevant, or will be likely to change the result on a new trial, may be made to appear by a case; but they can also, in many cases, be sufficiently shown by affidavit, and, when the parties consent to have the motion heard on such papers, there would seem to be no good reason why the court should not entertain it. had.[75] Where it is shown to be impracticable,[76] or impossible to obtain the affidavits of such new witnesses, their production may be excused.[77] The affidavits of the witnesses must set out fully and particularly the facts to which they will testify,[78] and state their willingness to testify upon a new trial.[79]

8. Counter Affidavits. While it has been said that the practice of presenting counter affidavits generally on motions for new trials is not proper,[80] or should not be encouraged,[81] and sometimes has been held not to be permissible,[82] it would seem that such affidavits are nevertheless generally admitted in opposition to the motion based upon matters outside of the record and supported by the affidavit.[83] This appears not only in those instances in which the practice is followed and recognized, although its propriety is not questioned or expressly determined,[84] as upon a motion based upon mistake affecting the jury,[85] and upon surprise, accident, or mistake,[86] but also in those in which it is expressly approved.[87] Sometimes the right of the party to take testimony in reply to that offered in support of the application is fixed by rule of court,[88] or the right to file counter affidavits

The unwillingness of a witness to make an affidavit, and the fact that he is out of the jurisdiction of the court, constituted a sufficient excuse for petitioner's failure to produce the affidavit in support of a motion for a new trial for newly discovered evidence. 88. In Vermont, under a rule promulgated by the supreme court in 1851, it was provided that in petition for new trials it should be allowed the petitionee to take testimony in reply to that which is served upon him in the petition and that it should always be upon reasonable notice to the adverse party and in the form of depositions, omitting the is given by statute.[89] Where the motion is based upon the discovery of new evidence, some of the cases expressly approve the use of counter affidavits upon the question of diligence, without determining the propriety of their use in other respects,[90] or recognize the practice, although the question of propriety is not raised or decided,[91] while others, in which objection does not appear to have been made or the precise point of practice to be directly raised or determined, recognize its propriety not only for the purpose of overcoming the movant's showing upon the question of diligence, but also for the purpose of denying the truth of the new evidence or of making a counter showing,[92] as well as for the purpose of impeaching the credibility of the new witnesses.[93] And when these last cases are considered in connection with those in which the point has been directly raised and expressly determined in favor of the propriety of such practice,[94] it would seem that the weight of authority supports the rule that counter affidavits are admissible not only upon the question of diligence but also as to the truth of the matter stated by the newly discovered witnesses.

O. Hearing and Determination of Application[95] — 1. Withdrawal. An applicant for a new trial may withdraw his motion before it has been ruled upon, even though the adverse party has consented to its allowance,[96] and if the movant in open court waives errors committed against him on the trial, although the adversary party thereafter consents to a new trial,an order granting a new trial is erroneous.[97] Where the foundation of the proceeding for a new trial is the notice of intention to move, the mere withdrawal of a formal written motion which under the particular practice is not essential to the proceeding will not operate as a withdrawal of the notice of intention or as an abandonment of the proceeding.[98]

2. Abandonment, Dismissal, or Waiver[99] — a. Delay. A motion for a new trial may be dismissed or overruled for failure of the applicant to prosecute it[1] or bring it to a hearing with due diligence.[2] Where the real moving parties to the motion are minors, it is held that the question of laches in bringing the motion to a

But the impeachment of the veracity of a deponent is very different, and as at present advised we do not see how the Court can give weight to it. If allowed, the deponent will claim to sustain his character, or the party who has adduced his affidavit will do so, and if the attack is proper, the defence must surely be so." hearing does not arise.[3] Nor can the opposing party complain if the delay is caused by his own laches,[4] or where the movant is not at fault.[5] Where the adverse party has made no objection to the delay, or the hearing is continued from time to time by consent, complaint cannot be made that the motion was not sooner brought to a hearing.[6] The question as to whether reasonable

Denial of new trial or dismissal of motion. — In Quivey v. Gambert, 32 Cal. 304, it was indicated that the proper practice in California was to let the motion proceed to final hearing and then deny it for failing to prosecute with reasonable diligence. The same rule was adhered to in McDonald v. McConkey, 57 Cal. 325, and Calderwood v. Peyser, 42 Cal. 110, and the first case above cited was followed in Sweeney v. Great Falls, etc., R. Co., 11 Mont. 34, 27 Pac. 347. But in Chase v. Evoy, 58 Cal. 348, it was held that it made no difference whether the order was one of dismissal or denial of the motion for a new trial where the motion could never be put in condition to be heard through some default of the party. And since this last case dismissal has been held to be proper where the motion is not in a condition to be submitted. Descalso v. Duane, (Cal. 1893) 33 Pac. 328, where it was further held that an order denying a dismissing motion for a new trial, although somewhat inconsistent, must be considered as a dismissal, and proper where through inexcusable neglect of the moving party the motion has not been brought into condition for hearing. In Desmond v. Faus, (Cal. 1893) 33 Pac. 457, on motion to dismiss the motion for a new trial an order entered denying the motion for a new trial was approved.

Failure to appear or argue motion is held to justify its dismissal. Monroe v. Lippman, 115 Ga. 164, 41 S. E. 717 (where it was held to be error to reinstate a motion which was dismissed for failure of movant's counsel to appear after notice at the time set for hearing, no sufficient excuse being offered for such absence); Calumet Furniture Co. v. Reinhold, 51 Ill. App. 323 (holding that the failure on the part of the movant to argue his motion will justify its denial on the ground of abandonment as it would not be just to the parties to let the motion go on default and then appeal from the judgment rendered upon such default).

But where a statement of the case is required to specifically set out the grounds of the motion, the failure to argue the motion is not an abandonment of it and the grounds thereof must be considered. Carder v. Baxter, 28 Cal. 99; State v. Central Pac. R. Co., 17 Nev. 259, 30 Pac. 887.

And every point need not be read or commented on at the hearing of the motion, under the penalty of waiving points not so read or commented on, provided the movant does not in some way deceive the court or otherwise waive such points. 5. West v. Jones, 69 Ga. 763; Mansfield v. Dudgeon, 6 Fed. 584, where the motion was considered after a delay of eleven years the fact that the party's attorney soon after the trial became and continued seriously ill and became an invalid and unable to attend to the ordinary duties of an attorney operating as some excuse for delay, besides which it appeared that two of the plaintiffs were adjudicated bankrupts and their assignee had never entered an appearance in the case and that one of such plaintiffs died not long after his bankruptcy, and there was no attempt to move in the case by either party until proceedings were taken a short time before the consideration of the motion, in behalf of the surviving plaintiffs, to enter judgment on the verdict, which was met by the old motion for a new trial.

In King v. Carey, 5 Ga. 270, it was held that a rule nisi for a new trial, to be awarded "so soon as counsel can be heard," is not returnable and to be heard necessarily during the term at which it is taken, but is to be considered as for a hearing when it may suit the convenience of the court; and if the minutes show no action on such a rule at the first term, it will not be dismissed on the ground that plaintiff, who moved the rule, was in default, and failed to prosecute his suit; but in such a state of facts the rule is to be considered as having been continued by the court, the opposite party not having moved to speed the cause, so as to put plaintiff in default. But see Seyfert v. Edison, 45 N. J. L. 304.

Where either party may bring the motion to a hearing it is held that delay of the movant in bringing his motion to a hearing is not a ground for denying the motion. Wyman v. Jensen, 26 Mont. 227, 67 Pac. 114. See also St. Francis Mill Co. v. Sugg, 142 Mo. 364, 44 S. W. 249. But in Descalso v. Duane, (Cal. 1893) 33 Pac. 328, it was held that the fact that under the statute either party might bring the motion to a hearing does not prevent the opposite party applying for dismissal, where, through inexcusable neglect, diligence has been exercised by the movant is one which rests largely in the discretion of the court.[7]

b. Defective Preliminary Proceedings. A motion for a new trial may be dismissed before, or at, the hearing or overruled for the failure of the applicant to take the necessary preliminary steps, or to take them in due time,[8] unless such failure has been waived.[9]

Order nunc pro tunc.— Under a statute which provided that a motion for a new trial "must be heard and decided" at the same term, it was held that a decision on such a motion might be filed after the term nunc pro tunc, where it was heard and argued during the term, although pending the decision a judgment was entered on the verdict. Calhoun v. Port Royal, etc., R. Co., 42 S. C. 132, 20 S. E. 30. Where the order is made during the term, it may be corrected nunc pro tunc at an ensuing term. Mosebach v. Reis, 2 Ohio Dec. Waiver of requirement.— Where, after a motion for a new trial on the minutes had been made as authorized by the statute, the court announced that it would be decided July 3, which was still a day within the trial term, and also announced that no court would be held July 5, and counsel for the opposing party requested a later decision, and in response thereto the court postponed the decision till July 7, which was the first day of the succeeding term, counsel stating that he would arrange to be represented then, it was held that counsel had waived the statutory requirement that the motion must be decided at the trial term. Richmond Second Nat. Bank v. Smith, 118 Wis. 18, 94 N. W. 664.

Before expiration of office.— If a motion for a new trial be taken under advisement by a circuit judge, his decision must be made before the expiration of his term of office; if made afterward, no consent of the parties can give effect to the decision as a judicial act. jurisdictions, under statutes or rules of court, or in the absence thereof, a motion goes over to the succeeding term, or from term to term, until disposed of, without any special order continuing it,[21] while in others there must have been an express continuance from one term to another, or the power of the court to act upon the motion is lost.[22]

But in Scarborough v. Smith, 52 Miss. 517, it was held that the motion must be disposed of at the term when made or at the next ensuing term, and cannot be kept under advisement by the judge beyond the term succeeding that at which it was made.

Missouri.— St. Francis Mill Co. v. Sugg, 142 Mo. 364, 44 S. W. 249; Givens v. Van Studdiford, 86 Mo. 149, 56 Am. Rep. 421.

McCarver v. Doe, 135 Ala. 542, 33 So. 486.

Nunc pro tunc entry.— Where a motion for a new trial is duly entered upon the motion docket of the court during the term, and an order is entered on said docket, at such term, for a continuance of the motion and the clerk fails to enter the order in the minutes of the court, it is within the power of the court at a subsequent term to amend the minutes nunc pro tunc so as to show the continuance of the motion, and the order of the judge on such motion docket is sufficient evidence to authorize the entry of such order. Ex p. Humes, 130 Ala. 201, 30 So. 732.

A continuance agreed upon by counsel, of which the court was informed at the time, may be entered nunc pro tunc, at a subsequent term. Spalding v. Meier, 40 Mo. 176. And where there has been a tacit understanding that a motion was to go over to the succeeding term, it cannot be objected that no continuance was entered. Dozier v. Owen, 63 Ga. 539; Pearce v. Strickler, 9 N. M. 46, 49 Pac. 727, where the motion was not passed on by the court within the time for which it was continued, and the court is considered not to have lost jurisdiction but to have deferred action for good cause within its power to further continue it.

Continuing term.— Where it is held that the court may not prolong or adjourn the term for the purpose of hearing a motion for a new trial, the motion itself may nevertheless be continued until a particular day, although that day falls within the next term. U. S. v. Hood, 19 D. C. 372, holding that, although the court intended to extend the term for the purpose of hearing the motion, yet having continued the motion until a particular day in the next term the intention to extend the term did not prevent the action of the court from having the legal effect and operation of continuing the motion from one term to a certain day in another term. Where the court is authorized to adjourn the term to a day intervening the next regular term, the adjourned term is a mere continuation of the former regular term and the court has full authority over all matters undisposed of at such term, including motions for new trials, the particular business to be transacted at the adjourned term not being prescribed in the order of adjournment. excuse for not having obtained them before.[24] The allowance or refusal of a continuance of a motion for a new trial rests largely in the discretion of the court.[25]

4. NOTICE OF HEARING. In the absence of statute the party applying for a new trial must take notice that his motion is on file liable to be called up at any time and is not entitled to notice of hearing.[26]

5. PROCEEDINGS AT HEARING[27] — a. Duty of Court in General. The court should hear and determine the motion for a new trial, or, if there is not time to do so before adjournment, the motion and proceedings should be continued to the next term of the court, and the court cannot arbitrarily adjourn the term in the midst of argument without taking such step or deciding the motion one way or the other.[28] It is improper,[29] or even reversible error, for a court to overrule a motion for a new trial pro forma and without proper consideration,[30] although on the Rule nisi to give time for affidavit.— On a motion for a new trial on the ground of newly discovered evidence, if there is a doubt as to its being newly discovered, the court should allow the rule nisi, so as to give time for an additional affidavit. Sharman v. Morton, 31 Ga. 34.

The loss of instructions given by the court on the trial is no ground for a motion to suspend the hearing of the motion for a new trial, since while the best evidence is undoubtedly the written charge, if the instructions are lost, other evidence for the judge's own memory may be resorted to to enable him to make known the instruction. 26. Shafer v. Hewitt, 6 Colo. App. 374, 41 Pac. 509; Burnham v. Spokane Mercantile Co., 18 Wash. 207, 51 Pac. 363, holding that the provision of the code requiring notice of any trial, hearing, motion, etc., to be had in an action in which a party has appeared, before any judgment at chambers, is not applicable to a motion for a new trial.

Rule requiring notice.—In Cochran v. Philadelphia Mortg., etc., Co., 70 Nebr. 100, 96 N. W. 1051, it was held that a failure to comply with the rule of court governing a district court which required one day's notice in writing of the hearing on a motion for a new trial would not ipso facto render the ruling on the motion erroneous, but that in the appellate court the inquiry would be whether the trial court should have allowed or denied the motion. The complaining party was the movant. In Earl v. Burr, 12 N. J. L. 321, a rule to show cause was discharged under a rule requiring notice of argument to be filed with the clerk at least two days before the term at which the rule to show cause was to be argued. But in Kennedy v. Kennedy, 18 N. J. L. 51, it was held that for want of such notice the cause fails to obtain a place on the paper or fails to obtain its proper place, and that if Earle v. Burr, supra, goes to this extent the decision was right, but that where the cause is on the paper and is on the proper place then, until the contrary appears, the court must intend that it was put there by the clerk or by his permission; that the rule requiring notice to be filed was made for the convenience of the clerk and is a matter with which the adverse counsel have nothing to do provided they have due notice of argument and the cause occupies its proper place on the paper and that Earl v. Burr, supra, in so far as it seems in conflict with this instruction must be considered as overruled.

other hand it is held that the court need not hear argument of counsel.[31] And, upon the coming on of the hearing, the court may consider the motion on the merits, instead of dismissing it, although the applicant is not present.[32] Where the hearing is had before the successor in office of the trial judge and he is unable to pass upon the merits of the motion, a new trial will be granted in some states.[33] So also it is error to grant a new trial before the motion has been submitted,[34] or to dismiss,[35] or to sustain a motion arbitrarily.[36]

b. Scope of Hearing. The parties will not be permitted to urge grounds for a new trial which are not embraced in the motion,[37] but sometimes the court may consider other grounds for which it may properly order a new trial of its own motion.[38] Where the motion is based upon newly discovered evidence, evidence discovered after the making of the motion may be considered.[39]

c. Evidence and Matters Considered.[40] On the hearing of a motion for a new trial it is the duty of the court to receive and consider proper evidence,[41] and it may consider ordinarily any matter shown by the records, minutes, or files of the

But it may sometimes happen that he is so fully possessed of the case and the law of it that the argument of such motion would be a waste of time. What the law does require is that the motion shall be heard by the judge who presided at the trial. This is the rule of Ohms v. State, 49 Wis. 415, 5 N. W. 827. This does not necessarily mean that counsel shall be allowed in every case to make a special oral argument to the court in support of the motion. It means that the judge should know the history of the case, and the facts thereof, and, in the light of such knowledge, should give to the question whether a new trial should be granted or denied calm, full deliberation and the exercise of his best judgment."

Contra.— On a motion involving the merits of the whole case on the testimony, it is held to be reversible error to refuse to hear argument of the motion. Atchison, etc., R. Co. v. Consolidated Cattle Co., 59 Kan. 111, 52 Pac. 71, where it is said that if a judge already has a well-defined opinion concerning the matter on which he is about to pass, he may decline to hear the party in whose favor he intends to decide but that he should never refuse the other party a fair chance to convince him that he is about to commit error.

Matters not part of trial.— At the call of the calendar on the day of trial and on the previous day, defendant moved by affidavit for a postponement, which was denied, and at the trial defendant moved that a juror be withdrawn because it was not ready with its witnesses, without stating any reasons for not being ready, which was denied, and an exception taken. It was held that a motion for a new trial directed to the refusal to allow withdrawal of a juror, which stated no reason why defendant's witnesses were not ready, would be denied, since the court could not refer to the motions for a continuance made before trial for such reasons. cause only;[49] and as a general rule a new trial should not be granted unless it appears that an injustice has been done.[50] If the existence of the alleged ground for a new trial is doubtful, the motion should be overruled,[51] and it is held that the court should not grant a new trial for insufficient legal cause to enable the applicant to shift his ground of action or defense,[52] or merely to reargue the whole case upon the law and facts as they were before the court on the first trial.[53]

Insufficient legal evidence.— But the court may not refuse to set aside a verdict not supported by sufficient legal evidence. Ermul v. Kullok, 3 Kan. 499; Backus v. Clark, 1 Kan. 303, 83 Am. Dec. 437; Wright v. Southern Express Co., 80 Fed. 85; Felton v. Spiro, 78 Fed. 576, 24 C. C. A. 321. See also supra, III, G, 1, 2.

Where there is no evidence to sustain the verdict it is error of law to refuse a new trial (Colvin v. McCormick Cotton Oil Co., 66 S. C. 61, 44 S. E. 380); but only where there is no evidence, and if there is any evi-clearly erroneous cannot be invoked to sustain an erroneous conclusion of law drawn from such undisputed facts.[55]

(III) CONSENT OF PARTIES. A trial court may properly refuse to grant a new trial requested by all the parties to the action, where no legal ground for such new trial exists.[56]

(IV) NEW TRIAL NOT BENEFICIAL. Where a new trial would be ineffectual to obtain other or substantial relief, it may be denied, although technical grounds for granting it may exist.[57] Thus a new trial may be refused, although there were errors of law in the reception of evidence or in charging the jury, if any other verdict would have been contrary to law or the evidence had such errors not intervened.[58]

(V) EXISTENCE OF OTHER REMEDY. A new trial has been refused where the showing is unsatisfactory and the applicant may bring another action and obtain all the benefit that he would obtain by the new trial.[59]

f. Amendment of Pleadings. On the hearing of a motion for a new trial, the pleadings may be amended to conform to the evidence adduced at the trial where such amendment would be proper after verdict.[60]

g. Division of Court. Where the court is equally divided upon the hearing of a rule nisi for a new trial, the rule falls and the party retains his verdict,[61] upon which judgment follows.[62]

6. CONDITIONS AND TERMS ON GRANTING OR REFUSING NEW TRIALS — a. In General. Generally courts may impose conditions upon the allowance or disallowance of new trials,[63] especially where such allowance or disallowance is discredence tending to establish all the material issues supporting the verdict it is not error to refuse to grant a new trial (Hagen v. Anderson County, 61 S. C. 490, 39 S. E. 712; Martin v. Jennings, 52 S. C. 371, 29 S. E. 807). See also in this connection APPEAL AND ERROR, 3 Cyc. 348 et seq.

tionary.[64] The authority to do so where a verdict is contrary to law,[65] or reversible for errors of law,[66] has been denied, and it is generally improper to refuse a new trial on condition that the prevailing party perform some act, the performance of which was a condition precedent to his right of action or defense.[67] The conditions or terms imposed must have some direct relation to the issues in the case.[68] The imposition of a condition or conditions in a particular case is generally discretionary with the court.[69]

b. Security For Payment of Judgment. As a condition of the allowance of a new trial, the court may require the applicant to consent that the verdict stand as security for the adverse party's claim,[70] or may require him to pay money into court or give security for the payment of any judgment that may be rendered against him.[71]

c. Waiver of Other Remedy. An applicant for a new trial may be required to waive exceptions or the right to an appeal.[72] But the filing of a motion for a new trial does not of itself operate as a waiver of a bill of exceptions.[73]

d. Limitation of Issues and Use of Evidence.[74] In many jurisdictions an order allowing a new trial may limit the issues to be tried,[75] or may require the admission of facts clearly established,[76] or the filing of new or amended pleadings,[77] or consent to a new trial on the merits and a waiver of defects in the pleadings or the form of the action,[78] or consent to the use of a report of evidence taken at the trial.[79] But the applicant cannot be required to admit facts as to which the evidence is clearly conflicting.[80]

e. Dismissal as to Part of Defendants.[81] The overruling of an application for a new trial may be made conditional upon the entering of a nolle prosequi or discontinuance by plaintiff as to defendants whose liability was not sufficiently shown.[82]

f. Changing Verdict. As a rule it is improper to require the prevailing party to consent to judgment against himself for part of his adversary's claim as a condition of the overruling of a motion for a new trial,[83] especially where the effect is to raise an issue not passed upon by the jury and upon the court's decision of that issue to allow entry of judgment against defendant;[84] but if he consents the error is not ground for a reversal on plaintiff's appeal where the original verdict is warranted by the evidence.[85] It has been held, however, that where the evidence warranted a verdict for defendants, save only as to one item of damages, it is not an abuse of discretion to refuse to grant a new trial on condition that defendants pay such amount.[86] A new trial should not be refused because the applicant

g. Payment of Costs and Expenses — (i) In General.[89] Generally the payment of costs by the applicant may be made a condition or term in an order allowing a new trial.[90] But where there is neither a statute nor a rule of court requiring the payment of costs as a condition of granting a new trial on the merits, the trial court may refuse to impose such a condition.[91] Payment of the expenses of the former trial[92] or of the motion[93] is sometimes required.

(ii) Nature of Grounds. In some jurisdictions the payment of costs[94] or expenses[95] cannot be required where a new trial is strictly a matter of right. Thus it has been held that the applicant should not be required to pay costs where a new trial is granted for errors of law occurring at the trial,[96] or because the ver-

An order granting a new trial on the payment of costs is not an absolute, but a conditional, grant of a new trial. Ex p. Lowe, 20 Ala. 330; Willis v. Mobile Planters', etc., Bank, 19 Ala. 141; Sloan v. Somers, 18 N. Effect of order for issuance of execution.—An order for a new trial upon the payment of costs for which execution is allowed to prevailing party,[8] or is otherwise excused.[9] If the time within which the payment is to be made is not prescribed, the grant is conditional, having the effect to keep the cause in court until the next term;[10] and the payment of the costs at any time during vacation, or before the cause is regularly called for trial at the next term, is a compliance with the condition, rendering the grant absolute.[11] But if a particular time is appointed for the payment of the costs, although it may expire in vacation, the payment within the prescribed period is a condition precedent, with which there must be strict compliance.[12]

(B) Extending Time For Payment. Subsequent payment cannot restore vitality to the order or grant, the time for payment having expired without compliance with the order,[13] and it would seem that the court cannot properly extend the time thereafter.[14]

(C) Waiver of Condition. The non-payment of costs may be waived by proceeding with the new trial without objection or application for relief.[15]

h. Increasing Amount of Recovery. Where the jury has failed to include in its verdict a certain element or item of damages which was clearly proved and is definitely ascertainable, the court may overrule a motion for a new trial upon issue is an absolute, unconditional grant of a new trial. Ex p. Beavers, 34 Ala. 71; Turney v. Lamont, 1 Baxt. (Tenn.) 265.

If the error be deemed the error of the jury, a party in whose favor a new trial is ordered must pay the costs. Harris v. Panama R. Co., 5 Bosw. (N. Y.) 312; North v. Sargeant, 14 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 223.

If the court subject the movant to more than the costs for that term, the grounds for so doing ought to be stated. Logan v. Gibbs, Litt. Sel. Cas. (Ky.) 19.

E. 406, holding that when by statute costs are to be paid at or before the next term after the new trial is granted, in default of which the order may be set aside on motion, payment is sufficient if made before the order for new trial is set aside, although not at or before the next term.

The order cannot require payment in a shorter time than that given by statute. Myers v. Lummis, 80 Ky. 456.

Where the order does not specify the time for payment, payment must be made on demand, although a previous tender has been refused. Holtum v. Greif, 144 Cal. 521, 78 Pac. 11.

The fault of the clerk in asking more than the taxable costs will not excuse failure to pay or tender the amount due within the time. Ex p. Dillard, 68 Ala. 594.

Payment must be in cash unless there is an accord and satisfaction. Screws v. Upshaw, 34 Ala. 496.

Payment after term.— It is generally held proper practice to grant a new trial on the payment of costs after the adjournment of the term at which the order is made. Ex p. Dillard, 68 Ala. 594; Carbon v. Stout, 7 Bush (Ky.) 609 (under statute); Ogden v. Rosenthal, 55 Nebr. 163, 75 N. i. Remission of Excess of Recovery — (I) Property. Where a verdict for plaintiff in an action for the recovery of property includes property as to which the verdict should have been for defendant, under the evidence, the court may require plaintiff to release his claim to such excess, by an amendment of his pleadings or otherwise, as a condition of overruling a motion for a new trial.[18]

(II) Damages[19] — (A) Excess of Amount Claimed. Where the amount of the recovery exceeds the demand of the successful party in his pleadings, a new trial may be refused if he will remit the excess.[20] for torts to property, the value of which may be ascertained,[22] or in cases of tortious homicides where the damages claimed are special and can with accuracy be computed in dollars and cents,[23] nearly all the decisions agree that the trial court may require a remittitur of the excess of damages recovered as a condition of refusing a new trial.[24] Such action on the part of the court is no invasion of the province of the jury;[25] nor can defendant complain of it if the judgment be not still excessive, and the verdict against him is warranted by the proof.[26] But there are exceptional cases in which an excessive verdict cannot be cured by a remittitur. Thus if the jury were erroneously charged concerning the measure of

Effect of remittitur.— An offer to enter judgment upon the verdict, providing a certain amount is remitted, is equivalent to a decision in favor of the successful party upon all the grounds for a new trial, except such as may be involved in the sum proposed to be remitted. McCubbin v. Atchison, 12 Kan. 166.

Effect of failure to remit.— Although the excessiveness is in a case in which plaintiff might remedy the error by a remittitur, if he fails to avail himself of the privilege it cannot be said that the court is in error in ordering a new trial and not compelling a remittitur. Barton v. Odessa, 109 Mo. App. 76, 82 S. W. 1119.

After a new trial is granted on the ground of excessiveness of the verdict it is too late to offer to remit. Hill v. Newman, 47 Ind. 187.

For misconduct of another.— The court should not require plaintiff to remit a part of the verdict as a penalty for the misconduct of another person. Clark v. Elmendorf, (Tex. Civ. App. 1904) 78 S. W. 538.

Application to particular items.— The failure of the court, in ordering a remittitur, to specify to which of several disputed items it applies, is not a reversible error. Ingalls v. Allen, 43 Ill. App. 624 [affirmed in 144 Ill. 535, 33 N. E. 203].

damages, and, in obedience to the court's instruction, included in their assessment of damages improper elements, and it is impossible to ascertain precisely how much the verdict was increased thereby, a remittitur is insufficient to redress the error, and a new trial must be granted.[27] So in an action for liquidated damages, where the verdict is excessive, and it is evident that the error in assessing the damages arose from a misconception of the evidence, which probably affected the determination of the other issues, a new trial will be awarded, instead of permitting a remittitur of the excess,[28] and where the damages given are so excessive as to clearly indicate passion or prejudice on the part of the jury, the same rule applies.[29]

(c) In Actions For Unliquidated Damages. Where, however, the damages sought are unliquidated, as in actions for personal injuries, or other cases sounding in tort, where there is no positive criterion for determining what the damages ought to be, a difference of opinion exists as to the right of the trial court to give plaintiff the option of remitting the excess of damages or suffering a new trial. Some decisions unequivocally deny the right in actions for unliquidated damages.[30] On the other hand other courts have expressly extended the application of the doctrine to this class of cases,[31] while still other cases have recognized

If the excess is not due to inadvertence or errors in calculation, but is excessive in view of the character and extent of the injuries sustained, it is the duty of the court to award a new trial, and the error of its failure to do so cannot be cured by ordering a remission of a portion of the sum adjudged to be excessive. evidence was improperly excluded.[45] A new trial may be denied where plaintiff will consent to reduce the verdict by the amount that the damages recovered might be reduced by newly discovered evidence.[46]

(G) Determination of Amount of Remittitur. It has been held that a voluntary offer to remit should be specific as to the amount which the party is willing to remit, as the court will not undertake to perform the functions of the jury upon an offer to remit so much of the verdict as the court may deem excessive.[47] On the other hand it has been held that, in determining the proper amount by which a verdict should be increased or reduced, reasonable doubt should be resolved in favor of the applicant for a new trial and against the party to whom the election is given.[48]

(H) Compliance With Order — (1) IN GENERAL. The prevailing party cannot be compelled to enter a remittitur or submit to a reduction of the amount of the verdict;[49] but, if he voluntarily elects to do so to prevent the granting of a new trial, he cannot be heard to complain afterward of the action of the court in requiring it.[50] He is not entitled to remit as to one defendant and refuse to remit as to another, under an order granting a new trial unless he should elect to take judgment against each for a certain specified sum, the order being entire.[51]

(2) TIME. The remittitur must be entered within the time fixed by an alternative order of court, or the order for a new trial will become absolute;[52] and if the party having the option to remit a part of his recovery or submit to a new trial appeals from the order before the expiration of the time limited therein for the exercise of the option, he is deemed to have exercised his option by the appeal and to have refused to remit, and the appellate court upon affirming the order will not revive the option by fixing a time within which the remittitur may be entered.[53] It has been held that the court may extend the time at the same term, although after the expiration of the original time,[54] but not after the

j. Compliance With Order Generally. A party who has accepted the terms or conditions of an order cannot be heard to complain that it was improper.[57] And, upon failure of the person given the election to comply with the conditions imposed, the order becomes absolute.[58]

7. Order For Dismissal or Judgment. Generally the court, on finding cause for setting aside a verdict or decision, should order a new trial rather than change or modify the verdict or decision or render judgment for the movant,[59] or dismiss the action for insufficiency of evidence,[60] or defects in the pleadings;[61] but the cause should again be set down on the docket and assigned for trial in due course.[62] But in some jurisdictions, under statutes, the court may modify the findings or render judgment for the movant, where the evidence of controlling facts is undisputed,[63] and the practice of entering an order which in effect corrects the verdict

8. Order Granting or Refusing New Trial[65] — a. Requisites and Sufficiency. Where there is no statute requiring it, an order disposing of a motion for new trial need not specify the papers which were used on such motion.[66] It is not necessary to specifically recite in an order overruling a motion for new trial that the new trial is denied.[67] But the mere issuing of an execution will not warrant the inference that a motion for new trial was overruled.[68] Where a motion for a new trial based on several grounds was sustained on one of them and "no other," it was an explicit overruling of the motion on all other grounds.[69] In the absence of a statutory requirement, an order for a new trial need not recite the grounds upon which it is granted,[70] although in some decisions so holding it is said to be better practice to do so.[71] Statutes providing that an order shall state the grounds thereof are held to be mandatory by some courts[72] and directory by others.[73] Therefore an order granting a new trial will generally be sustained if it can be done on any ground named in the application, where the order names no ground,[74]

or the language of the order does not necessarily exclude such ground.[75] Under some statutes counsel for the applicant may require the judge to file written reasons for denying the motion.[76] Where the movant took many exceptions at the trial to rulings on the evidence, an order reciting the granting of a new trial for errors committed on the trial prejudicing him is sufficient;[77] and the order made in the minutes of the court, instead of stating the grounds of the motion at length, may refer to the specification of errors and insufficiency of evidence set forth in the bill of exceptions or statement of the case for the particulars.[78]

b. Effect.[79] An order for a new trial, not expressly limited to particular issues or parties, opens up the whole case for further proceedings.[80] It vacates the verdict[81] and special findings[82] and a judgment entered thereon,[83] even though it contains no express direction to that effect. Nevertheless if an appeal is taken from the order granting a new trial, it suspends the operation of the order, and pending such appeal the judgment remains subsisting for the purposes of an appeal therefrom, as if no order for new trial had been made.[84] Where the verdict is general, an order granting a new trial as to one cause of action opens the whole case.[85]

9. Rehearing of Application and Vacation or Modification of Order[86] — a. Filing other grounds.— While the court may, as a general rule, set aside orders made during the same term at which they were entered, and, under this well-recognized rule of practice, may set aside the order refusing a new trial and grant one, to permit counsel, after the motion has been overruled, to file other grounds, is in violation of the spirit and meaning of the code. Resettling order.— Where an order, setting aside as inadequate a verdict, properly expresses the decision of the court, a motion to resettle the order so that a new trial should be granted on condition that plaintiff pay costs of the first trial is properly refused, since if any error was committed in granting the original order, or in failing to impose proper terms, it might be reviewed on appeal from the original order without the necessity of appealing from the order declining to resettle. Bloomingdale v. Steubing, 10 Misc. (N. Y.) 229, 30 N. Y. Suppl. 1056. So where the court granted a motion for a new trial made on the minutes of all the grounds stated in N. Y. Code Civ. Proc. § 999, which order was reversed and judgment was directed to be entered on the verdict, it was held that defendant could not thereafter have a settlement of the order denying his motion on the ground that the verdict was contrary to the evidence or the law, which grounds were embraced in the above-mentioned section, since the party had a full opportunity to be heard upon the merits and there was no reason for a second appeal upon the same question or one so closely related to the former that it was of necessity disposed of in the determination of the original appeal. In Missouri it has been held in a memorandum decision that there can be no valid record of what judgment a court proposes to render in the future, and where the bill of exceptions shows that a motion was to be overruled at a future day there is no cause for review in the appellate court. State v. Lanham, 6 Mo. App. 577.

In Kansas it was also held in a memorandum decision that where a motion below for a new trial has not been ruled on the supreme court will affirm the judgment. Wilson v. Kestler, 34 Kan. 61, 7 Pac. 793. In neither of these decisions does it appear whether or not the errors relied on for a reversal were such only as might be made the basis of a motion for new trial. If there were other reasons there is no authority on which they can be sustained, because a judgment may be reversed for errors apparent of record without any motion for new trial.

Recital in bill of exceptions.— In one decision it has been held that the omission of the court to enter the order made upon the minute book cannot be supplied by a recital in the bill of exceptions that such motions were made and overruled (Nashville, etc., R. Co. v. Egerton, 98 Tenn. 541, 41 S. W. 1035); but the contrary conclusion has been reached in another (King v. Ohio Valley R. Co., 10 S. W. 631, 10 Ky. L. Rep. 748).

ceed to try it again and give a judgment different from the first.[5] Where the cause is set for hearing regularly, it may be heard in the absence of either party.[6] Notice of the allowance and of the time of the new trial is required in some jurisdictions.[7] Where the order has been made in open court, and written exceptions filed, the case may be noticed for trial without serving on the excepting party a copy of the order.[8] Where plaintiff's motion for new trial is decided in his favor and the rule is entered on the last day on which he can give notice of trial for the ensuing term, it is his duty to take notice of the rule and give the notice or he will be liable for the default in omitting to bring his cause to trial.[9]

B. Amendment of Pleadings and Proceedings. Where a new trial has been granted, the court may, in its discretion, allow either party to amend his pleadings in any proper matter,[10] and may permit new parties to be added.[11] It may permit the withdrawing of a demurrer which was overruled before the trial,[12] or may rule on a demurrer which was overlooked.[13]

C. Scope of Inquiry. Generally on a new trial the issues of fact of the former trial will be tried,[14] the whole case being opened for trial[15] unless limited to particular parties[16] or issues.[17] A defense not submitted to the jury at the former trial may be insisted upon where it has not been withdrawn of record, or abandoned by agreement of the parties.[18] A party may not, however, take a ground inconsistent with that taken by him at a former trial or trials.[19] In some jurisdictions matters covered by exceptions taken at the former trial will not be considered.[20]

been rendered for one of the parties does not change the burden of proof or the quantum of evidence required upon a new trial.[21]

2. ADMISSIONS ON FORMER TRIAL. Generally a party is not bound by admissions made by him for the purpose of the former trial.[22]

3. RECEPTION OF EVIDENCE. Facts cannot be established by evidence thereof given on a former trial unless a sufficient reason is shown for not producing the original witness,[23] or unless the court made consent to the use of a transcript of such evidence a condition of the allowance of the new trial.[24] Incompetent or irrelevant evidence should be excluded, on proper objection, although it was admitted at the former trial.[25] Ex parte affidavits used on the hearing of the motion for a new trial are generally inadmissible.[26] So it is not proper for counsel, while examining witnesses, to read to them the stenographer's notes of their testimony in the former trial, the accuracy of such notes not having been first established.[27] Where the defense of fraudulent alteration of a note in suit is set up for the first time on a new trial, the affidavit of defendant on which the default in the former trial was set aside, and the plea then put in is admissible to show that the new defense was an afterthought and purely fictitious.[28]

4. INSTRUCTIONS. The court, in instructing the jury that they are the judges of the amount of damages to be assessed, cannot be required to add a qualification that their verdict must not be for a sum materially in excess of former verdicts.[29] Where plaintiff's right to recover depends entirely on testimony which was not given on the first trial, it is error to refuse to charge that such testimony is "the only evidence in this case upon which they can find a verdict against defendants."[30]

erty, the unsuccessful party may demand a new trial without cause.[33] These statutes do not apply, however, to actions commenced before they went into effect.[34]

3. Actions to Try Title. Special statutory actions to try titles to unoccupied lands,[35] or to test the validity of devises,[36] are not actions for the recovery of real property in which new trials as of right may be had. But some statutes provide for new trials without cause in actions to try title.[37]

4. Actions For Damages to Real Property. Generally a new trial without cause is not demandable in an action for damages to real property which does not involve directly the title thereto.[38]

5. Actions For Forcible Entry and Detainer. Ordinarily a new trial as of right will not be granted in a summary action for forcible entry or detainer,[39] or ejectment for the non-payment of rent;[40] but in one jurisdiction where such an action is certified to a superior court for the trial of a question of title, a new trial may be granted without cause.[41]

a trust,[44] is not an action for the recovery of real property within the meaning of the statutes. But under the language of the statutes in a few states, a new trial as of right may be had in an action to quiet title as against an adverse claim of any title in the land.[45] An action to establish a trust and compel a conveyance of the trust property or quiet the title in plaintiff is within the scope of such statutes.[46] So is an action by a grantor or his heirs, devisees, or assignees to annul his conveyance,[47] but an action by creditors to set aside a conveyance for fraud is not.[48]

7. Suits For Specific Performance. A new trial is not demandable of right in an action for the specific performance of a contract to convey real property.[49]

8. Suits For Partition. Ordinarily a new trial as of right is not demandable in an action for the partition of real property,[50] but it may be when the title and right to possession are directly involved.[51]

9. Suits Involving Easements. The unsuccessful party is not entitled to a new trial without cause in an action to prevent the obstruction of an easement and for damages;[52] but he may demand a new trial of right in an action to quiet title to an easement, under those statutes which give the right in actions to quiet title generally.[53] mortgages,[57] are not within the scope of the statutes providing for new trials as of right.

11. ADMINISTRATIVE ACTIONS TO SELL REAL ESTATE. A new trial as of right is not demandable in a proceeding by an administrator to sell land to pay debts or legacies.[58]

12. ACTIONS OR PROCEEDINGS TO ESTABLISH BOUNDARIES. An action or proceeding to settle boundaries is not within the scope of the statutes giving a new trial without cause.[59]

13. JOINDER OF CAUSES OF ACTION. In one state at least a new trial as of right will not be granted in an action which has proceeded to judgment upon a complaint which contains any substantial cause as to which such new trial is not demandable.[60] In other jurisdictions a new trial may be granted without cause in such an action.[61] A claim for incidental relief does not so affect the character of the action as to deprive the unsuccessful party of the right to a new trial without cause.[62] Ordinarily the new trial should be limited to the causes or issues as to which it is properly demandable.[63] Where one of two defendants is entitled to a new trial as of right, a motion to vacate an order granting a new trial as to both defendants should be limited to defendant not entitled to it.[64] Where defendants, who had not demanded a second trial, claimed and were allowed the advantages of a second trial granted on the demand of a co-defendant, they were estopped to object to the regularity of the steps taken to obtain it.[65]

14. NATURE OF CROSS ACTION OR DEFENSE. The right to a new trial without cause in an action for the recovery of real property is not affected by the fact that the answer asks for equitable relief.[66] So also the right to a new trial without cause in an action to quiet title is not barred by a cross complaint setting up a cause of action as to which such right is not demandable.[67] A judgment for defendant on a cross complaint claiming a lien on the land is no bar to a new trial of the issue joined on the complaint, existence of a lien in favor of defendant being put in issue by the complaint.[68] On the other hand it has been held that where the unsuccessful party would not be entitled to demand a new trial as of right on the cause of action stated in the petition or complaint, he is not entitled to do so because the answer seeks to quiet defendant's title to the real property involved.[69] The right to a new trial without cause in an action in which the recovery of real property is demanded in the answer only has been affirmed[70] and denied.[71] Where either party admits the title to real property claimed by his adversary, a new trial without cause is not demandable as to remaining issues.[72]

B. Right to New Trial — 1. Where No Trial Has Been Had. A new trial without cause will not be granted after judgment on a default,[73] nor on a demurrer,[74] nor after judgment by consent.[75]

2. Effect of Other Proceedings. A new trial as of right is not barred by an adverse ruling on a motion for a new trial for cause,[76] nor by a prior erroneous refusal to grant a new trial without cause,[77] nor by a motion in arrest of judgment,[78] nor by the pendency of an appeal,[79] nor by the affirmance of the judgment on appeal,[80] nor by a previous new trial granted for cause,[81] nor under a stipulation of the parties.[82] A new trial may, it has been held, be demanded as of right, in an appropriate action, after a trial de novo on appeal from an inferior court.[83]

3. Sale of Property Involved. A new trial as of right is not barred by a sale of the property involved under execution,[84] nor by a conveyance thereof by the prevailing party without notice of the other party's intention to demand a new trial.[85]

4. Waiver by Agreement — a. In General. The right to a new trial without cause may be waived by a prior agreement of the parties.[86] A new trial of right is waived by a stipulation for a judgment absolute entered into for the purpose of obtaining an appeal.[87]

b. Stipulation of Facts. That a new trial without cause cannot be demanded in a case tried on a stipulation of facts has been affirmed in some states,[88] and denied in others.[89]

5. Number of New Trials. Under some statutes each party may demand one new trial without cause.[90] Under other statutes only one new trial in an action is demandable as of right.[91] And this, although new parties were added, at their own request, after the first trial, who were unsuccessful on the second trial.[92] The judgment rendered in the new trial as of right is not final in the sense that it may not be reversed on appeal.[93] In some states the granting of a second new trial without specific cause is a matter of discretion.[94] A judgment reversed on appeal or error should not be counted in determining whether another new trial is demandable as of right.[95] It has been held proper to so count a new trial granted without cause in the action while pending in another court,[96] although there is authority to the contrary.[97]

C. Proceedings to Procure New Trial — 1. Parties to Application. Ordinarily the unsuccessful party, whether plaintiff or defendant, may claim a new trial without cause in a proper action.[98] A new trial is demandable only by such party or persons claiming title under him as heirs, devisees, or assignees.[99] The applicant need not have been a party to the record, if he sustains any such relation to the unsuccessful party.[1]

2. Time For Application and Order — a. In General. An application for a new trial without cause must be made within the time limited by statute.[2] The payment of costs alone within such time is not sufficient.[3] But it is generally sufficient to pay the costs and file the application, or at least to submit it to the court, in due time, although it is not acted upon until later.[4] In a few states a demand for a new trial must be ruled upon at the time it is made.[5] In the absence of statutory authority, a new trial cannot be ordered in vacation.[6]

b. In Relation to Entry of Judgment. In a number of jurisdictions it is held that an application for a new trial must be made within a certain time after the rendition or entry of the judgment.[7] An application which is made before the entry of judgment has been held premature and a nullity;[8] but, it has also been held permissible, by another court, to make the application and order a new trial before judgment has been perfected.[9] It is generally held,[10] but not payment is prevented by circumstances not within the control of the applicant.[20] It is not competent for the court to restrict the time allowed by statute for the payment of costs or damages.[21] An order for a new trial made conditional on the future payment of costs has been held sufficient by some courts[22] and erroneous by others.[23]

b. Waiver of Objection or Condition. The acceptance by the prevailing party of costs to which he would be otherwise entitled does not estop him to object to the granting of a new trial without cause.[24] The payment of costs as a condition precedent may be waived by proceeding with the action at subsequent terms without objection.[25] The failure of the prevailing party to have the costs taxed and demand payment of the same from the applicant is not a waiver of non-payment,[26] unless the erroneous order has been duly excepted to.[27]

5. Bond For Costs and Damages. In some states the giving of a bond for costs and damages that may be recovered against the applicant is a condition precedent to the granting of a new trial without cause,[28] and cannot be furnished out of time on the hearing of a motion to vacate the order.[29] The undertaking need not necessarily be executed by the applicant himself.[30] And defects in the bond may be waived by failure to object.[31]

6. The Application. In the absence of a statute or rule of court requiring it, a motion or demand for a new trial, made at the trial or trial term, need not be in writing;[32] and the failure of the clerk to make entry of a motion made orally in open court will not defeat the right to a new trial.[33] A demand in open court, at the close of the trial, is a sufficient compliance with a statute authorizing the party against whom the judgment is rendered to demand another trial by notice on the journal, and the clerk should immediately enter such request on the journal.[34] The application, if made in writing, need not recite those matters which are of record,[35] nor show that no prior new trial has been granted without cause.[36] It has been held improper to grant a new trial as of right upon a motion for a new trial for cause.[37]

7. Hearing and Determination — a. Matters Considered. On the hearing of the application no other evidence than the record is usually necessary.[38] The statute does not contemplate a trial of the application or an answer thereto.[39]

b. Right to New Trial. Where the applicant has complied with the statute, a new trial is generally a matter of right and not of discretion.[40] But in some states the allowance of a second new trial without specific cause is a matter of discretion.[41] And in one state at least there is statutory authority for a new trial, without specific cause, in the discretion of the court in the first instance.[42]

c. Order For New Trial — (I) Requisites and Effect. The order for a new trial vacates the verdict and proceedings based upon the trial.[43] Properly it should recite the performance of conditions precedent,[44] and should vacate expressly the previous judgment.[45]

(II) Vacation. Where a new trial as a matter of right is erroneously granted in an action in which it is not demandable, the court has a right, before entry on such trial, to set aside the order awarding it.[46] The right to attack an order granting a new trial on this ground may, however, be lost by a failure to seasonably urge the objection.[47] Since a party is in no case entitled to a statutory new trial as of right except upon the payment of all costs within a certain time, an order granting such a new trial may be vacated at a subsequent term of court for failure to pay the costs within the time limited.[48] The same rule applies where the court grants a new trial without first requiring the giving of a bond required by statute in such cases.[49] Where, however, the order recites the payment of costs, it has been held that it cannot be set aside, since such an order is a final judgment.[50]

D. Proceedings on New Trial — 1. Notice of Allowance. Notice of the granting of a new trial is sometimes required by statute.[51]

2. Amendment of Pleadings. After the granting of a new trial as of right, the court may permit the amendment of a pleading.[52]

3. Conduct of Trial. While, on a statutory new trial, the case must be tried de novo, and disposed of as if no trial had been previously had,[53] yet if, in the

I. DEFINITION, HISTORY, AND NATURE OF OFFICE.

A. Definition. A notary or notary public[1] is a public officer whose function it is to attest and certify, by his hand and official seal, certain classes of documents, in order to give them credit and authenticity in foreign jurisdictions; to take acknowledgments of deeds and other conveyances, and certify the same; and to perform certain official acts, chiefly in commercial matters, such as the protesting of notes and bills, the noting of foreign drafts, and marine protests in cases of loss or damage.[2]

B. History and Nature of Office. The office of notary has long been known both to the civil and to the common law.[3] It exists and is recognized

Prohibition against use of free pass, etc.— A notary public is a public officer, within the meaning of N. Y. Const. art. 13, § 5, which prohibits public officers from asking, accepting, or receiving, for their own use or benefit, or for the use or benefit of another, and from using themselves, or in conjunction with another, any free pass, free transportation, franking privilege, or discrimination in passenger, telegraph, or telephone rates from any person or corporation, and making a violation of the provision a misdemeanor and ground for forfeiture of office. People v. Rathbone, 145 N. Y. 434, 40 N. E. 395, 28 L. R. A. 384 [affirming 85 Hun 503, 33 N. Y. Suppl. 132 (affirming 11 Misc. 98, 32 N. Y. Suppl. 108)]. And see People v. Wadhams, 176 N. Y. 9, 68 N. E. 65.

The office of city notary of the city of New Orleans, not being created or recognized by the charter, was not a municipal office, and the provisions of the Act of 1868, No. 156, usually termed the Intrusion Act, could not be invoked in a contest between two notaries for the position. The court said: "The City Council, for its convenience and for the facility of business, selects a notary public, specially to draw up such deeds and instruments as may be required, and he is called city notary. We regard his office as one merely incidental and subordinate, and not to be considered as of that character of public office contemplated by the Intrusion Act." State v. Castell, 22 La. Ann. 15.

A notary is not a magistrate within the meaning of a fire insurance policy requiring a magistrate's certificate to proofs of loss. Cayon v. Dwelling-House Ins. Co., 68 Wis. 510, 32 N. W. 540.

7. New Orleans v. Bienvenu, 23 La. Ann. 710 (holding that a notary public was a state officer who held his appointment from the governor by and with the consent of the

although in a few states it has been regarded as a county office.[8] The office has grown from that of a mere scribe to a public office,[9] and its functions, once simply commercial,[10] have now a wider scope.[11] In general the office is ministerial and not judicial;[12] but in some jurisdictions it has been held with respect to particular acts that notaries act judicially,[13] and in the absence of constitutional restriction the legislature may, as has been done in Alabama, expressly confer senate, and therefore the city of New Orleans had no right or authority to impose a license-tax on such officer in his official character; and that authority to impose such tax was not conferred by authority given to the city to impose a license-tax on trades, occupations, and professions); Com. v. Shindle, 19 Pa. Co. Ct. 258; Davey v. Ruffel, 14 Pa. Co. Ct. 272; Maxwell v. Hartmann, 50 Wis. 660, 8 N. W. 103; Bettman v. Warwick, 108 Fed. 46, 47 C. C. A. 185 (holding that since a notary public, appointed under the laws of a state by the governor, was a state officer employed in the exercise of functions belonging to it in its governmental capacity, a bond which he was required to execute for the faithful discharge of the duties of his office, as a condition to his qualification, was an instrument exempt from the stamp tax imposed by the act of congress of 1898, within the meaning of the proviso to schedule A, exempting the states in the exercise of functions belonging to them in their ordinary governmental capacity); U. S. v. Bixby, 9 Fed. 8, 10 Biss. 520.

8. A notary public who receives his appointment and commission from the governor of the state, on the recommendation of the judge from a county court, is a public officer of the county. Governor v. Gordon, 15 Ala. 72. "A notary public, while holding his office by the appointment of the governor, can exercise the functions thereof only in the county for which he is appointed. In this sense he is a county officer." Matter of House Bill No. 166, 9 Colo. 628, 629, 21 Pac. 473.

Not county officers.— "As to notaries public, another confusion has been caused by the Act of 1893, seeming to treat them as county officers, when they are in fact and in law state officers, appointed by the governor and confirmed by the senate, but required 'to reside within such place or places within this state, as the governor shall, in and by the respective commissions, direct.' . . . This is done that they may have a known place, where they may be found when wanted. But they are as much state officers as judges of the Supreme Court or common pleas." Davey v. Ruffel, 14 Pa. Co. Ct. 272, 275. The office of notary is not a county office, within the meaning of a constitutional provision that none but electors shall hold county offices, where the statute declares that the jurisdiction of a notary public shall be coextensive with the limits of the state. U. S. v. Bixby, 9 Fed. 78, 10 Biss. 520.

9. Carroll v. State, 58 Ala. 396; Ashcraft v. Chapman, 38 Conn. 230, 232, where it is said: "Notaries were originally mere commercial scriveners. Becoming important to the commercial world, their appointment was provided for and their duties regulated by public law, and they became sworn public officers — Notaries Public — and their certificates were received as evidence of their official acts. Afterward, as they were authorized or came to use seals, the impressions made by them were received as evidence of their official character. And when as matter of convenience they have since been deputed or authorized to perform acts not commercial in their character, courts have continued to receive their certificates and seals as sufficient evidence of those facts."

judicial functions upon them.[14] In the absence of a statute a notary public is unknown to the criminal law.[15]

II. ELIGIBILITY AND QUALIFICATION.

A. In General.[16] The eligibility of notaries is largely a matter of legislation or constitutional provision.[17] A constitutional or statutory ineligibility nullifies the appointment or election;[18] but where the statute merely forbids a person to take office during a certain disqualification, his election or appointment may be valid.[19] A constitutional prohibition may be either express[20] or implied.[21]

B. Special Disqualifications — 1. Sex. At common law a woman cannot be a notary;[22] but women may be made eligible by statute in the absence of any constitutional prohibition,[23] or where the office is created by statute and not by the constitution.[24] Under the constitution of some states, however, the legislature cannot make women eligible to the office of notary.[25]

2. MINORITY. While infants may or may not be disqualified by the constitution or by statute from holding the office of notary,[26] a minor has been held eligible to the office at common law.[27]

3. LACK OF CITIZENSHIP. Ineligibility from lack of citizenship is a matter of constitutional and legislative provision.[28]

4. HOLDING OTHER OFFICE. By statute, in some jurisdictions, other public offices are incompatible with that of notary, so that one cannot hold both.[29]

5. CONFLICTING INTEREST. In Pennsylvania it is provided by statute that no person who is a stock-holder, director, cashier, teller, clerk, or other officer in any bank or banking institution, or in the employment thereof, shall at the same time hold, exercise, or enjoy the office of notary public.[30] And in Indiana, by statute, no officer in any bank, corporation, or association possessed of banking power can be a notary public.[31]

III. APPOINTMENT.[32]

VIII, c. 21, and since the passage of this statute they have been appointed by the Court of Faculties of the Archbishop of Canterbury." Opinion of Justices, 150 Mass. 586, 587, 23 N. E. 850, 6 L. R. A. 842. And see Vandewater v. Williamson, 13 Phila. (Pa.) 140. The master of the faculties has a discretion as to the number of notaries public to be appointed in a town in England (Graham v. Smart, 9 Jur. N. S. 387; Eaton v. Watson, [1904] W. N. 24; Tunbridge v. Mathews, [1903] W. N. 158); or in a city or town in an English colony (Bailleau v. Victorian Soc. of Notaries, [1904] P. 180, 20 T. L. R. 251). In deciding upon an application for appointment as a notary the master of the faculties has to consider not only the fitness of the applicant inoperative.[34] Generally the appointment is by the governor,[35] sometimes with the advice and consent of the senate,[36] or of the council.[37]

B. Notaries Ex Officio. By statute certain other public offices frequently include that of notary, so that one holding the same is ex officio a notary.[38]

IV. TERM OF OFFICE AND REMOVAL.

A. In General. The length of a notary's term of office is regulated by constitution or by statute.[39] Under some statutes a notary public continues in office after expiration of his term until he is removed or his successor is appointed.[40] Under a statute requiring notaries to renew their bonds every five years and pro-

(Eaton v. Watson, [1904] W. N. 24), but also and especially the need of notaries in the place (Graham v. Smart, 9 Jur. N. S. 387; Eaton v. Watson, [1904] W. N. 24; Tunbridge v. Mathews, [1903] W. N. 158) with regard to the convenience of the town, as shown by its business, and the wishes of those who are mainly interested in the appointment, as bankers and shop owners (Graham v. Smart, 9 Jur. N. S. 387).

In London, by statute, notaries are admitted to practice by the company of Scriveners of the City of London (Rex v. Scriveners' Co., 10 B. & C. 511, 8 L. J. K. B. O. S. 199, 21 E. C. L. 219), and mandamus will lie to compel the company to admit an applicant in a proper case (Rex v. Scriveners' Co., supra; Reg. v. Scriveners' Co., 3 Q. B. 959, 3 G. & D. 272, 12 L. J. United States consul.— The statutes of the United States authorizing United States consuls abroad to perform any notarial act that may be required to be done by any notary in any of the United States do not merely add a function to the office of consul, but make the consul ex officio a notary public. Bruce v. Gibson, 8 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 31, 5 Cinc. L. Bul. 101. An affidavit administered by such consul is not signed officially in his capacity as a notary unless he affix to his name the words "Notary Public" or else write after the word consul the addition "and ex officio notary public." Bruce v. Gibson, supra.

A recorder of Louisiana was recognized as a notary ex officio in Wilson v. Simpson, 68 Tex. 306, 4 S. W. 839.

Justices of the peace.— In Mississippi justices of the peace are authorized by statute to perform the duties of notaries in particular instances, including protest of commercial paper, taking acknowledgments, etc. Dennistoun v. Potts, 26 Miss. 13; Burke v. McKay, 2 How. (U. S.) 66, 11 L. ed. 181. The constitution of Texas has recognized domestic justices of the peace as notaries ex officio, but it is said that such justices are not recognized as notaries by foreign governments. Judge.— In Texas a power of attorney acknowledged before a domestic judge who was by statute ex officio a notary public was held duly authenticated. Butler v. Dunagan, 19 Tex. 559.

A notary appointed to fill a vacancy holds for the full term of four years prescribed by the statute, and not merely for the remainder of his predecessor's term. Kelly v. Gilly, 5 La. Ann. 534.

40. See the statutes of the several states.

In Alabama, of the two classes of notaries public whom the governor is authorized to appoint, those having the jurisdiction of justices of the peace hold their office three years from the date of their commission, while those authorized to administer oaths, take acknowledgments, protest bills of exchange, etc., hold after the expiration of the three years, until their successors are qualified. Cary v. State, 76 Ala. 78. Under Code (1886), § 1102, providing that a competent number of notaries shall be appointed for each county, who shall hold office for three years and until their successors are qualified, a notary, on the expiration of his term, is only entitled to continue the discharge of his duties pending reappointment for a reasonable time. Sandlin v. Dowdell, 143 Ala. 518, 39 So. 279.

In Georgia, under Code, §§ 132, 1499, providing that notaries public for commercial purposes are public officers and that a public officer holds until a successor has been appointed or he has been removed, a commercial notary public after his term of office of four years is an officer de jure, in the absence of removal or the appointment of a successor. Smith v. Meador, 74 Ga. 416, 58 Am. Rep. 438.

viding that they shall "continue in the discharge of their duties so long as they renew and file their bonds," a notary who has failed to renew his bond remains a notary de jure until the court suspends him.[41]

B. Vacation of Office and Suspension, Removal, and Forfeiture — 1. Vacation by New Constitution or Statute. A notary's office may be vacated by constitution or statute,[42] but it will not be held by implication that a new constitutional or statutory provision abolishes the office of those previously appointed.[43]

2. Suspension, Removal, and Forfeiture. A vacancy may result from the suspension or removal of a notary for cause, which is a matter of constitutional or statutory provision.[44] So a statute may provide for forfeiture of the office of a notary under certain circumstances.[45] In the absence of a constitutional or statutory provision the governor cannot remove a duly appointed notary from office before the expiration of his term, where the constitution gives to the appointing power the right of removing at pleasure all incumbents the duration of whose term is not provided for by the constitution or declared by law, as this must be construed to deny the right of removal in those cases where the tenure is defined.[46]

Notary de facto after failure to give bond see infra, V.

42. Cragg v. Westmore, 13 La. Ann. 344, holding that by an act declaring the office of every notary in the parish of New Orleans to be vacated, and authorizing the governor to appoint a limited number of successors, a notary's office was vacated, although no successor was appointed.

43. Buckley v. Seymour, 30 La. Ann. 1341 (holding that existing notarial offices were not vacated by a new constitution); Guzman v. Walker, 11 La. Ann. 693 (holding that a new act, "Relative to Notaries Public," which was merely a digest, with some slight alterations, of preëxisting laws, did not abolish the notarial offices then existing); Denistoun v. Potts, 26 Miss. 13 (holding that a constitution making no mention of notaries, but providing that office should not be granted for life or during good behavior, but during good behavior for a limited term, also that all officers then holding commissions should continue to hold and exercise their offices until superseded "pursuant to the provisions of this constitution," and until their successors were duly qualified, did not abolish the office of notary public); Gilleland v. Drake, 36 Tex. 676 (holding that a new constitution recognizing justices of the peace as notaries ex officio did not do away with the office of notary as previously existing).

Term of existing notary shortened by constitution.— Where a constitution made no limitation as to duration of the term of office of notaries, and a subsequent constitution fixed the term of all offices not otherwise provided for at four years, it was held that the term of office of notaries public who were appointed prior to the adoption of the last constitution were limited to four years after this adoption. State v. Percy, 5 La. Ann. 282.

44. See the constitutions and statutes of the several states. See also State v. Laresche, 28 La. Ann. 26 (holding that Rev. St. § 2520, providing that recorders, notaries public, etc., shall be liable to certain fines for breaches of official duty, does not abolish or conflict with section 2505, providing that a notary may be suspended for just cause; and that a notary may be fined under the first named section and suspended from office under the second); In re Hayman, 5 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 550, 7 Ohio N. P. 515 (holding that a notary public who certifies in blank to receipts for salary of a public officer or employee is guilty of such misconduct in office as justifies his removal).

In Louisiana the general statute providing that notaries "may be suspended by any judge of the Supreme Court or District Courts of the State, for failure to pay over any money intrusted to them in their professional character, for failure to satisfy a final judgment rendered against them in such capacity, or for other just cause" applies to notaries of New Orleans as well as to others. Receiving or using free pass, etc.—A notary public is a public officer within the meaning of N. Y. E. 65; and supra, I, B, text and note 6. A notary public who, before the constitution went into effect, had rightfully received a free pass over a railroad, was by this provision prohibited from thereafter using it while he continued to hold the office. People v. Rathbone, supra. For a violation of this provision by a notary public an action by the people is maintainable against him to have his office adjudged to be forfeited. V. NOTARIES DE FACTO.

Generally a person acting as a notary under color of authority with public acquiescence is held to be a notary de facto, and as to the public and third persons his acts are valid and cannot be attacked collaterally.[47] This principle has been applied, for example, to one who is appointed and acts as notary, but who is ineligible or disqualified to act as such by reason of alienage,[48] sex,[49] or interest,[50] or by acceptance of another office, even though his office as notary is thereby "vacated" under the statute,[51] or by reason of being an officer or stock holder in a corporation in violation of a statute;[52] or one whose commission is defective,[53] or who is holding over after expiration of his term,[54] or who has failed to file his bond,[55] take the oath of office,[56] or otherwise comply with directory provisions of the statute.[57] It is well settled, however, that a mere usurper is not an officer de

Notaries in Confederate states.— In Todd v. Neal, 49 Ala. 266, and Donegan v. Wood, 49 Ala. 242, 20 Am. VI. FUNCTION AND POWERS.

A. In General. The principal function of a notary is the authentication of documents. This power is used in specified cases for the perpetuation of facts as evidence.[60] Notaries may also have power to take affidavits,[61] depositions,[62] and acknowledgments,[63] and to administer oaths,[64] and in some jurisdictions their powers are far more extensive.[65]

B. Authentication — 1. In General. A notary, by setting the marks of his official sanction upon certain kinds of documents, gives them the force of evidence.[66] These marks are his certificate[67] and official seal,[68] which in some instances are proof of their own authenticity,[69] while in others they require further authentication.[70] It is well settled that a notary's certificate is prima facie evidence of such matters only as the notary is authorized by law to certify,[71] and it is also duly qualified in Kings county, but who had failed to set forth in his certificate, which he was required to do in order to practice in another county, certain essential details, was held to be a notary de facto in the latter county.

In Louisiana the supreme court has said: "The law attaches full credit to their official acts. . . . The act passed before a notary, under the formalities prescribed for its execution, constitutes a record and a certified copy, under the hand and seal of the officer, is received as full proof of the original. . . . The authentic act is full proof of the agreement contained in it against the contracting parties, their heirs and assigns, unless it is declared a forgery." Tete's Succession, 7 La. Ann. 95, 96. The authentic act as relates to contracts must be executed in the presence of two witnesses, free, male, and at least fourteen years of age, or of three witnesses, if the party be blind. App. 188 (stating broadly that, under the rule of the United States supreme court, courts will take official notice of seals of notaries public, for they are officers recognized throughout the commercial world, a Missouri court may take judicial notice of a seal of an Iowa notary on the jurat of an affidavit taken in Iowa, although the jurat contains no statement of his authority to administer an oath. Where, however, it appeared that the seal conformed to the Iowa statute which was put in evidence, the affidavit was rejected on the ground that there is nothing to show that the notary administered the oath in his own county).

Canada.— Merchants Express Co. v. Morton, 15 Grant Ch. (U. C.) 274, holding that by statute an affidavit sworn in the United States before a notary public and having the signature and official seal of the notary as the official administering the oath was receivable without proof aliunde in the courts of Upper Canada.

See also AFFIDAVITS, 2 Cyc. 1.

Verification of pleadings.— Feuchtwanger v. McCool, 29 N. J. Eq. 151, holding that, where a rule of court requires an oath to an answer sworn without the state to be certified under seal, and a statute provides that an oath to be used in a suit or legal proceeding in New Jersey taken without the state may be taken before a notary, and a reedgment of an instrument;[78] or a certificate of the protest, and notice thereof, of an inland bill or "other protestable security,"[79] or of a promissory note,[80] by a domestic[81] or a foreign[82] notary. Some of the statutes relate exclusively to domestic notaries,[83] and do not apply to foreign notaries.[84] Under some statutes a foreign notary must certify under his seal as to his authority.[85]

3. Further Authentication. In the absence of contrary provisions a foreign notary's jurat must be authenticated by another official;[86] but it seems judicial cital in the jurat that the person before whom it is taken is such notary and his official designation annexed to his signature and attested under his official seal, shall be sufficient proof that he is such notary, a certificate in which the official designation is not added to any signature, although the jurat state that he is a notary, is good on the ground that the rule requires only a certificate under seal.

78. Goree v. Wadsworth, 91 Ala. 416, 8 So. 712. Compare Muskingum County Fund Com'rs v. Glass, 17 Ohio 542, holding that a statute requiring each notary to authenticate his official acts with his personal seal, and providing that "due faith and credit shall be given to his protestations, attestations," or other instruments of publication, does not include acknowledgments, which are otherwise provided for. And see, generally, Acknowledgments, 1 Cyc. 506.

79. Under a statute which provides that the protest of a notary public which shall set forth an admission notice for non-payment of any inland bill of exchange or "other protestable security," the protest of a promissory note by a foreign notary is not evidence without proof that it is a protestable security under the law of the state where the note was made; the presumption in the absence of such proof being that the common law prevails in the foreign state. 81. State Bank v. Whitlow, 6 Ala. 135 (holding that a protest "apparently subscribed and sealed" by the notary commissioned and resident in this state was evidence under a statute declaring that the protest of a notary of an inland bill of exchange or other protestable security setting forth demand, refusal, non-acceptance, or non-payment and that notice thereof was given either personally or otherwise to the parties entitled thereto shall be evidence of such facts); Bettis v. Schreiber, 31 Minn. 329, 17 N. W. 863. See Commercial Paper, 8 Cyc. 274 et seq.

82. Bradley v. Northern Bank, 60 Ala. 252 (holding that a statute declaring protest of notary's evidence of presentment, non-payment, and notice of dishonor applies to foreign as well as domestic notaries, and admitting in evidence a certificate of protest by a foreign notary; there being proof, however, of circumstances showing that such certificate would have been evidence in the state where it was executed); Shanklin v. Cooper, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 41; Schorr v. Woodlief, 23 La. Ann. 473 (where it appears that a foreign notary's certificate of protest proves itself, but a notary's certificate of notice does not, since the Louisiana statute making a notary's certificate notice of evidence applies only to those of domestic notaries); Bettis v. Schreiber, 31 Minn. 329, 17 N. W. 863 (holding that since a notary's certificate of protest of a bill or promissory note of Minnesota or any other state is made prima facie evidence by the statute of the facts therein certified, such certificates are properly received as evidence of the fact of the notice stated therein); Lawson v. Pinckney, 40 N. 83. Browne v. Philadelphia Bank, 6 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 484, 486, 9 Am. Dec. 463, where it was held that a domestic notary's certificate under his official seal was sufficient to prove his own official character, and the court said: "Public convenience requires that a certificate, under a seal of this kind, should be prima facie evidence, without proving that the person who used it . . . was a notary commissioned by the governor. It ought to be presumed, till the contrary is proved, that no man would dare to assume the office without proper authority."

84. Etting v. Schuylkill Bank, 2 Pa. St. 355, 44 Am. Dec. 295, holding that a statute which declared that the official acts, protests, and attestation of notaries in Pennsylvania certified under their hands and seals had been made evidence by statute in that state is confined to those of domestic notaries.

85. Trevor v. Colgate, 181 Ill. 129, 131, 54 N. E. 909, where it was urged by counsel that under the provision that "when any oath authorized or required by law to be made is made out of the State, it may be administered by any officer authorized by the laws of the State in which it is so administered, and if such officer have a seal, his certificate under his official seal shall be received as prima facie evidence, without further proof of his authority to administer oaths," the jurat and official seal of a foreign notary established prima facie his authority to administer oaths, but it was held that the meaning of the section was that if the notary should certify under his seal that he had such authority in his own state, such certificate should be prima facie evidence of such fact. See also Smith v. Lyons, 80 Ill. 600.

86. Phillips v. Flint, 3 La. 146 (holding that a foreign notary's certificate, other than the protest of a bill, requires authentication discretion has been exercised in some cases,[87] as where the value affected is very small.[88] An affidavit before a foreign notary, although his certificate lack proper authentication, may be admitted by consent.[89] Some of the states have expressly provided by statute for the authentication of a foreign notary's certificate.[90]

Judge, 82 Mich. 160, 46 N. W. 436 (holding that an affidavit taken by a foreign notary for use in Michigan should have been certified as to the authority of the notary to administer oaths according to the Michigan statute, the power to take an oath being statutory, and not pertaining to the office by custom); Bohn v. Zeigler, 44 W. Va. 402, 403, 29 S. E. 983 (where the court said: "The seal of a notary out of the State does not, alone, verify and authenticate his act, as regards bills of exchange, under § 7, c. 51, Code, and deeds, under § 3, c. 73. His signature, alone is enough as to depositions under c. 130, § 33, Code. . . . And, as to affidavits, our statute requires certain further authentication," and rejected an affidavit for attachment made in another state, for lack of a certificate by a proper officer to the notary's authority to take oaths and the genuineness of the signature).

Sufficiency of clerk's certificate.— Under a statute requiring a foreign notary's identity to be authenticated by a certificate verifying

The omission of a proper authentication of a notary's certificate may be cured by amendment.[91]

C. Particular Powers and Duties — 1. Marine Protests. A notary may note and extend marine protests.[92] The power exists at common law.[93] The notary's practice in taking a marine protest is to enter in his book the fact of the protest and the reasons given for making it.[94]

2. As to Commercial Paper.[95] Independently of statute a notary public may present foreign bills of exchange and protest them.[96] A protest of commercial paper other than a foreign bill of exchange is not a notarial act at common law,[97] but it may be and often is made so by statute.[98] Giving notice of dishonor is not the genuineness of his signature, the certificate of a clerk of court stating "it is believed to be genuine" is a sufficient verification. Heffernan v. Harvey, 41 W. Va. 766, 24 S. E. 592.

In Louisiana a domestic notary's certificate of protest as well as the protest itself must be signed by two witnesses. Gas Light, etc., Co. v. Nuttall, 19 La. 447. Such certificate must be sworn to before the two witnesses. State Bank v. Watson, 15 La. 38. The statute which makes a notary's certificate sworn by himself and two witnesses evidence of notice does not exclude other modes of proof. McDonough v. Thompson, 11 La. 566. Where a notary's protest showed on its face that it was protested before two witnesses, but that they did not sign that part of the instrument which merely certifies denial and refusal to pay, but did sign the certificate in the original, and the notary certified a copy from the record, it was held sufficient evidence of the facts stated. State Bank v. Black, 10 Rob. (La.) 59.

91. Bohn v. Zeigler, 44 W. Va. 402, 29 S. 97. California.— Tevis v. Randall, 6 Cal. 632, 65 Am. Dec. 547.

Iowa.— Bernard v. Barry, 1 Greene 388, holding that a foreign notary's certificate is not admissible to prove the protest of a foreign promissory note, for, while the same reason applies to such note as to a foreign bill of exchange, "an arbitrary difference is made."

Louisiana.— Waldron v. Turpin, 15 La. 552, 35 Am. Dec. 210, rejecting a foreign notary's protest where it did not appear that, by the laws of the state where it was executed, a notary's protest to a note was evidence.

Maryland.— Whittington v. Farmers' Bank, 6 Harr. & J. 548, holding that, prior to the passage of the act of 1837, a notary's protest of a promissory note was not in itself evidence in chief of demand and should not go to the jury as such.

Mississippi.— Smith v. Gibbs, 2 Sm. & M. 479; White v. Englehard, 2 Sm. & M. 38, holding that the notarial protest of a promissory note, by a foreign notary, was not evidence in Mississippi.

New Hampshire.— Carter v. Burley, 9 N. H. 558, holding that the certificate by a notary of another state of the protest of a note or inland bill if the note could be so regarded was not evidence.

Pennsylvania.— See Bennett v. Young, 18 Pa. St. 261, where it was said that the act of Jan. 2, 1815, declaring the official acts, protest, and attestations of domestic notaries prima facie was not intended to enlarge their official duties, but merely to furnish the means of authenticating such acts as were within their authority before.

Virginia.— Corbin v. Planters' Nat. Bank, 87 Va. 661, 13 S. E. 98, 24 Am. St. Rep. 673, holding that a notary's certificate is not evidence of a protest of a note or inland bill.

United States.— Burke v. McKay, 2 How. 66, 11 L. ed. 181; Nicholls v. Webb, 8 Wheat. 326, 5 L. ed. 628.

England.— Leftley v. Mills, 4 T. R. 170, holding that there could be no protest of an inland bill except by St. 9 & 10 Wm. III, c. 17, which applied only where a remedy was sought against the drawer, and that there could be no protest as against the accepter.

California.— Tevis v. Randall, 6 Cal. 632, 75 Am. Dec. 547 (where the court said of promissory notes that they were made protestable by statute, therefore "the protest of them must be attended with all the incidents belonging to foreign bills of exchange"); Connolly v. Goodwin, 5 Cal. 220.

Georgia.— Southern Bank v. Mechanics' Sav. Bank, 27 Ga. 252, holding that two sets of certificates of protest, the one supplementary to the other, showing notice, may be received in evidence. Compare Allen v. Georgia Nat. Bank, 60 Ga. 347, where certificate of Maryland.— Moses v. Franklin Bank, 34 Md. 574; Whiteford v. Burckmyer, 1 Gill 127, 39 Am. Dec. 640, holding that the act of 1837 in that state extended the credit given by the courtesy of commercial relations to a notary public to include his protest of inland bills and notes.

Minnesota.— Kern v. Von Phul, 7 Minn. 426, 82 Am. Dec. 105.

Mississippi.— White v. Englehard, 2 Sm. & M. 38, holding that a statute making notaries' certificates of protest evidence applies only to domestic notaries, and rejecting a certificate of protest of a promissory note by a Louisiana notary, although the court said that such certificate of protest of a foreign bill would be evidence.

New Hampshire.— Rushworth v. Moore, 36 N. H. 188.

New York.— Gawtry v. Doane, 51 N. Y. 84 [affirming 48 Barb. 148] (holding that by statute the certificate of a notary, under his hand and seal, of presentment and protest of a note, is made presumptive evidence of the facts it contains unless an affidavit denying notice is filed ten days by the party charged); Kellam v. McKoon, 31 Hun 519 (holding that under a provision of the code of civil procedure permitting notaries to make certificates of protest for the purpose of evidence, a second protest to take the place of the one which is lost is admissible in evidence); Kirtland v. Wanzer, 2 Duer 278 (holding that the provisions of the New York statute relating to protests applied only to those made within the state by New York notaries, therefore the protests and certificates of a notary of New Orleans as to promissory notes were not evidence in New York); Pierson v. Boyd, 2 Duer 33; Gessner v. Smith, 2 N. Y. Suppl. 655; Dutchess County Bank v. Ibbotson, 5 Den. 110. The affidavit denying notice, necessary under the code to exclude a notary's certificate, is not supplied by a statement in a sworn answer. Gawtry v. Doane, 51 N. Y. 84 [affirming 48 Barb. 148].

Compare Spann v. Baltzell, 1 Fla. 301, 44 Am. Dec. 346, where a notary's certificate of protest, with his oral testimony, was received in evidence.

In Louisiana the statute requiring two witnesses to attest the notary's record does not apply to protest, but only to notice, and in order to be evidence of protest the certificate needs no witnesses. Lallande v. Hope, 18 La. Ann. 188; Crawford v. Read, 9 Rob. 243; Wagner v. Hall, 16 La. 563. But compare Gas Light, etc., Co. v. Nuttall, 19 La. 447 (where it is said that under the act of 1821, two witnesses are required not only to the protest, but also to the record of the certificate); State Bank v. Watson, 15 La. 38 (holding that an original protest by a notary signed by two witnesses is properly admitted in evidence). A notary need not make demand, protest, and service of notice in the presence of witnesses; they are only to attest the fact that the entry was made by the notary in his book. Foreign bill of exchange.— A notary's certificate does not prove notice of dishonor in a foreign bill of exchange. Whitman v. Farmers' Bank, 8 Port. (Ala.) 258; Schorr v. Woodlief, 23 La. Ann. 473, holding that while a foreign notary's certificate of protest to a foreign bill proves itself, the certificate of notice does not, since the Louisiana statute making a notary's certificate of protest evidence applies only to domestic notices.

1. Swayze v. Britton, 17 Kan. 625; and other cases above cited.

Statute applies to foreign and domestic notaries and paper.— A statute making a protest of any bill of exchange, note, or order, duly certified by any notary public, competent evidence of the facts stated therein, including notice, applies to foreign and domestic bills and foreign and domestic notaries. Rushworth v. Moore, 36 N. H. 188. See also Starr v. Sanford, 45 Pa. St. 193.

Statute does not apply to previous transactions.— The provision of Rev. St. (1842) making the protest of a note evidence of notice of dishonor cannot apply to transactions which took place before the enactment. Williams v. Putnam, 14 N. H. 540, 40 Am. Dec. 204.

In Lower Canada no authority has been given to Canadian notaries of Quebec or any other province to take affidavits for use in the courts of Quebec. As to the authority of foreign notaries to take affidavits for use in the courts of Lower Canada, there are two directly conflicting decisions, namely, Laurendeau v. De Montford, 7 Quebec Pr. 37, where the court rejected the affidavit of a New York notary on the ground that the provision applied only to notaries in England, and Schwob v. Baker, 5 Quebec Pr. 441, where the court received an affidavit from a New York notary on the theory that the same provision applies to notaries in foreign countries generally.

A certificate that the officer taking an affidavit outside or beyond the limits of the state was a notary public duly commissioned and sworn is insufficient, as it does not indicate what official acts he was authorized to perform, and it will not be assumed that such officer had the same powers as an officer of that name has within the state. Bowen v. Stilwell, 9 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 277.

Certificate of authority of notary in foreign state to take affidavit for use in the courts of New York held insufficient. See Stanton affidavits for an attachment, and other special kinds of affidavits have been held properly or improperly taken before notaries.[8]

E. 689, both holding that under a statute by which notaries are authorized to "administer oaths in all matters incident to them as commercial officers, and all other oaths which are not by law required to be administered by a particular officer," a criminal accusation may be framed on an affidavit attested by a commercial notary.

Illinois.— Mineral Point R. Co. v. Keep, 22 Ill. 9, 74 Am. Dec. 124, where an affidavit made before a notary in another state, with his statement in his certificate that he was authorized to administer oaths, was held good.

Kentucky.— Harbour-Pitt Shoe Co. v. Dixon, 60 S. W. 186, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1169, where it was held that an affidavit for attachment might be made before a notary.

Maine.— Duncan v. Grant, 86 Me. 212, 29 Atl. 987, holding that a creditor desiring to arrest his creditor upon mesne process in an action of assumpsit, as provided by Rev. St. c. 113, may make the oath and have it certified as therein required before a notary public instead of before a justice of the peace, although section 2 of said chapter requires the oath to be taken before and be certified by a justice of the peace, since, by Rev. St. c. 32, § 3, a notary public is authorized to administer oaths in all cases where a justice of the peace can act.

Minnesota.— State v. Scatena, 84 Minn. 281, 87 N. W. 764, where it was held that under a statute providing that notaries public should have power to administer all oaths required or authorized by law a notary might take an oath required by local ordinance of an applicant for a liquor license.

Nebraska.— Browne v. Palmer, 66 Nebr. 287, 290, 92 N. W. 315, where the court said: "An affidavit taken before a notary public either in or out of the state of Nebraska may be used in support of a motion or other procedure in court where necessary."

Ohio.— Williams, etc., Co. v. Raitze, 8 Ohio S. & C. Pl. Dec. 695, 7 Ohio N. P. 614, holding that the affidavit for arrest of a debtor before judgment, under Ohio Rev. St. § 5481 et seq., on the ground that the debtor contracted the debt with the intent to defraud, or is about to leave the state, sworn to before a notary public, is insufficient, since the statute requires that it must be sworn to before a judge or clerk of court or justice of the peace.

Tennessee.— Fawcett v. Chicago, etc., R. Co., 113 Tenn. 246, 81 S. W. 839, holding that a pauper oath, administered by a foreign notary for the purpose of an action in Tennessee in forma pauperis, is void for lack of statutory authority.

Texas.— Wood v. St. Louis Southwestern R. Co., (Civ. App. 1906) 97 S. W. 323, holding that an affidavit of inability to pay costs, taken before a notary, was not valid where proof was required by statute to be made before a county judge or before the court.

United States.— U. S. v. Curtis, 107 U. S. 671, 2 S. Ct. 507, 27 L. ed. 534 (holding that, prior to the act of congress of 1881, a notary appointed by a state could not take an affidavit to verify the report of an officer of a national bank); U. S. v. Hardison, 135 Fed. 419 (holding that a notary may take the affidavit of a proposed surety on a warehouse bond of a distiller as to the sufficiency of the latter); U. S. v. Manion, 44 Fed. 800 (holding that a notary cannot take the affidavits required by the rules prescribed by the commissioner of the land-office).

In Alabama notaries public are given the powers of justices of the peace and are judicial officers, within the real meaning of the statute (Sess. Acts (1894–1895), p. 1088, § 3) authorizing prosecutions in the county court of Shelby county to be instituted or commenced "by affidavit made before any judicial officers of said county." Taking deposition of adverse party.— Under Hill Annot. Laws Oreg. § 814, subd. 1, and § 823, authorizing the taking of the deposition of an adverse party before an officer authorized to administer oath on the giving of a three days' notice, unless the court prescribes a shorter time, it is not necessary that the officer taking the deposition shall be commissioned by the court, and such deposition may be taken by a notary public, since a notary public is a person who is authorized to administer oaths under Hill Annot. Indiana.— Burtt v. Pyle, 89 Ind. 398, holding that in the absence of statutory authority a notary taking a deposition may not punish for contempt.

Kansas.— In re Huron, 58 Kan. 152, 48 Pac. 574, 62 Am. St. Rep. 614, 36 L. R. A. 822, holding that a notary could not punish for contempt a witness who attended the taking of a deposition, in obedience to a subpœna, but refused to testify. The contrary had been held in this state (In re Abeles, 12 Kan. 451 [followed by In re Merkle, 40 Kan. 27, 19 Pac. 401; In re Beardsley, 37 Kan. 666, 16 Pac. 153]), but In re Huron, supra, expressly overrules In re Abeles, supra, on this point. In two other Kansas cases (Davis' Petition, 38 Kan. 408, 16 Pac. 790; In re Cubberly, 39 Kan. 291, 18 Pac. 173) recusant witnesses who had been imprisoned for contempt by notaries taking depositions were released on the ground that their testimony had been improperly required for the purpose merely of ascertaining what they would testify at subsequent trials. In the case of Davis' Petition, supra, the authority of the notary, apart from its abuse, was disputed by counsel, but not passed on by the court. In In re Cubberly, supra, the authority seems not to have been questioned.

Missouri.—Ex p. McKee, 18 Mo. 599, where it was held under a statute providing that a witness summoned and attending and refusing to testify may be committed to prison by the court or other person authorized to take his deposition or testimony, the notary being authorized to take a deposition might in such case so commit a witness. The question of constitutionality was not raised. See also Ex p. Munford, 57 Mo. 603. In Ex p. Krieger, 7 Mo. App. 367, 370, the court said: "A notary, as a notary, has no power to commit for contempt; and contempt of court is a recognized offence, but there is no such thing known to the law as contempt of a notary-public." But compare Ex p. Livingston, 12 Mo. App. 80, 83, where a notary was sustained in committing as for contempt a witness who refused to answer proper questions, the court saying: "If the question be foreign to the subject-matter of the suit pending, and be evidently asked for a purpose not contemplated by the litigation, the officer will not be sustained in any attempt to enforce an answer by proceedings as for a contempt. This is the doctrine of Ex p. Krieger, supra. . . . But if these objections do not appear, some latitude must be allowed to the notarial discretion."

has no power to confer on a notary authority to punish for contempt.[15] The presumption of jurisdiction that attaches to the act of a court in committing for contempt does not attach to a notary.[16] If the question for refusing to answer which a witness has been committed by a notary be improper or irrelevant, the witness will be released on habeas corpus.[17] A statute authorizing a notary taking a deposition to commit for contempt "any person summoned as a witness and attending, who shall refuse to give evidence" does not empower him to commit for refusing to produce books and papers under a subpœna duces tecum.[18] A notary taking a deposition is an officer of the court assuming to take testimony for the court.[19] It has been held in some jurisdictions that a notary in taking depositions acts judicially,[20] while in others the contrary has been held.[21]

Nebraska.—In re Butler, (1906) 107 N. W. 572 (holding that under the code of civil procedure a notary may fine, not more than fifty dollars, a witness failing to attend when duly served with subpœna, but that he may not commit to hail for that contempt. The question of constitutionality was not raised); Courtnay v. Knox, 31 Nebr. 652, 48 N. W. 763 (holding that a notary has no power to punish for contempt consisting of misconduct at the taking of a deposition, such as vulgar and profane language, his power being limited to statutory authority); Dogge v. State, 21 Nebr. 272, 31 N. W. 929 (where it was held that the constitutional provision vesting the judicial power in courts did not exclude notaries, and imprisonment by a notary for refusal to testify was upheld).

New York.— People v. Leubischer, 34 N. Y. App. Div. 577, 54 N. Y. Suppl. 869, 28 N. Y. Civ. Proc. 265 [affirming 23 Misc. 495, 51 N. Y. Suppl. 735, appeal dismissed in 157 N. Y. 721, 53 N. E. 1130, motion for reargument denied in 158 N. Y. 676, 53 N. St. Rep. 614, 36 L. R. 5. ACKNOWLEDGMENTS.[22] The power to take acknowledgments is purely statutory.[23] The power to take an effective acknowledgment relating to real property must be granted by the law of the state or country where the property is.[24] By statute the acknowledgment of a deed before a notary public in another state is presumed to be made in compliance with the laws of the place of execution.[25] The effectiveness of an acknowledgment depends upon compliance with the statutory provisions.[26] Authority to take acknowledgments of deeds covers acknowledgments of deeds conveying land lying in the same state in a county other than the one for which the notary is commissioned.[27] By statute a state may authorize acknowledgments of instruments relating to land situated within its boundaries to be taken abroad by notaries of foreign countries,[28] or in sister states.[29] The authority of notaries to take acknowledgments does not extend to the taking of such as are by statute expressly or impliedly required to be taken before some other officer.[30] The taking of acknowledgments is, by the weight of authority, a ministerial act[31] An acknowledgment taken before a de facto notary is good.[32]

Pr. 118, where the statute authorizing notaries to take oaths and affirmations "in all cases where the same may now be administered by commissioners of deeds" was construed as extending to notaries in all counties whether there were commissioners of deeds in such counties or not.

Ohio.— State v. Jackson, 36 Ohio St. 281, holding, however, that a general statute empowering notaries to "administer all oaths required or authorized to be administered in this state" did not affect the requirement of an older statute concerning arbitration, and providing that oaths in arbitration proceedings should be administered by a judge or justice of the peace.

Texas.— Campbell v. State, 43 Tex. Cr. 602, 68 S. W. 513.

United States.— U. S. v. Law, 50 Fed. 915, holding that the most general power conferred by the statutes of the United States on a notary to administer an oath, given by Rev. St. § 1778, namely, in all cases in which under the laws of the United States a justice of the peace may do so, does not include an oath required by the post-office department in an investigation as to the loss of a registered letter.

Schedule in insolvency proceedings.—Under a statute providing that in insolvency proceedings the schedule filed by the petitioner must be sworn to before "the judge having jurisdiction," the schedule must be sworn to before the judge of the court in which the application is made, and if it is sworn to before a notary public the court has no jurisdiction to decree a discharge. Baker v. Everhart, 65 Cal. 27, 2 Pac. 495.

Information in criminal case.— A notary public has no authority to administer an oath to the complainant in a criminal case, and therefore an information sworn to before a notary is invalid. State v. Lauver, 26 Nebr. 757, 42 N. W. 762; Richards v. State, 22 Nebr. 145, 34 N. W. 346.

36. Tompert v. Lithgow, 1 Bush (Ky.) 176, where the removal of a mayor from office was held void on a collateral attack because the members of the court of impeachment had taken the oath of office before a notary; since affidavits as defined by the Kentucky civil code empowering notaries to take them did not include oaths of office.

38. Douglass v. State, 117 Ala. 185, 23 So. 142; Harper v. State, 109 Ala. 66, 19 So. 901. Notaries public who are ex-officio justices of the peace are judicial officers. Carroll v. State, 58 Ala. 396. A statute conferring on such notaries criminal jurisdiction concurrent with certain courts is constitutional. Carroll v. State, supra. The Alabama courts will take judicial notice of the ward of a city for which such notary is appointed. Russell v. Huntsville R., etc., Co., 137 Ala. 627, 34 So. 855. Such a judicial notary may issue a warrant for arrest (Harper v. State, 109 Ala. 66, 19 So. 901), and he may punish a contempt committed at a trial before him (Coleman v. Roberts, 113 Ala. 323, 21 So. 449, 59 Am. St. Rep. 111, 36 L. R. A. 84); but such a notary cannot issue a warrant of attachment returnable to the circuit court (Nordlinger v. Gordon, 72 Ala. 239; Vann v. Adams, 71 Ala. 475). A notary public with ex-officio powers of a justice of the peace has the same jurisdiction in bastardy proceedings as a justice. Canada.[40] In some states statutes conferring judicial powers on notaries public are unconstitutional.[41]

D. Place in Which Notary May Act. In general a notary, although appointed by the governor, can act as such only within the county or other political division for which he is appointed;[42] but in some jurisdictions the territorial limit of jurisdiction has been extended, so that a notary may act anywhere in the

v. American Surety Co., 109 La. 713, 33 So. 742; Schmitt v. Drouet, 42 La. Ann. 1064, 8 So. 396, 21 Am. St. Rep. 408. Among the duties not mentioned in the statute are that of receiving the renunciation of married women of their rights over the property of their husbands, the duty of attending to the registry of acts of sale, of paraphing notes secured by privilege or mortgage with acts before them and other duties. Schmitt v. Drouet, supra. Notaries are "authorized to receive all acts and contracts to which parties wish to give the character of authenticity attached to the act of public authority, to secure their date, their preservation and the delivery of copies." Schmitt v. Drouet, supra. The supreme court has said of notaries: "Courts of justice, by means of these officers, are relieved from a large mass of business, which would otherwise impede and embarrass their ordinary proceedings. Meetings of creditors are held before notaries; a large portion of the business in suits in partitions, is accomplished before them. They make wills; they hold and conduct meetings of families, in which the interest of minors are concerned, they receive acknowledgments of the condition of persons, acts of emancipation, donation, and every species of conventional obligation." Tete's Succession, 7 La. Ann. 95, 96.

Authentic acts.— An authentic act, if in the nature of a contract, must be executed before a notary public in the presence of two witnesses, free, male, and at least fourteen years of age, or three witnesses if the party be blind. Tete's Succession, 7 La. Ann. 95.

To give effect to a will is a notarial power in Lower Canada. Evanturel v. Evanturel, 38 L. J. P. C. 41, 21 L. T. Rep. N. S. 4, 6 Moore P. C. N. S. 75, 17 Wkly. Rep. 541, 16 Eng. Reprint 655, holding that the provision of French law in force in Lower Canada, which requires that a will made before two notaries, or a notary and priest, be dictated ("dict et nomme") to such notaries, etc., does not mean that the will must be dictated verbatim, or written at the time when the provisions are stated to officials. A notary may take down the provisions in brief and embody them in testamentary form, elsewhere, and they may be afterward signed by the testator.

The clerk of a notary who passes an instrument other than a will may witness the mark of the party who cannot write. Crebassa v. Crepeau, 1 Rev. Lég. 667.

A notary employed in the execution of a mortgage and having the instrument in his custody is not authorized thereby and has thereby no ostensible authority to receive moneys due on mortgage, and the mortgagee is not bound by payment to him of moneys which such mortgagee has not received. Gervais v. McCarthy, 35 Can. Sup. Ct. 14.

The only method of attacking the validity of an authentic notarial act is by a direct process for that purpose known as inscription de faux. Choquette v. McDonald, 19 Quebec Super. Ct. 408. But it would seem that there may be other methods of attack upon the validity of an instrument which is bad without fault of the notary. Clement v. Catafard, 8 Rev. Lég. 624.

An antenuptial agreement under Quebec law was held in Upper Canada sufficiently executed when signed by two notaries in their own names only, they certifying that they had signed at the request of the parties, who could not do so. Taillifer v. Taillifer, 21 Ont. 337.

Notarial acts are those which are taken by a notary or notaries public. Léveillé v. Kauntz, 4 Quebec Pr. 358.

41. See CONSTITUTIONAL LAW, 8 Cyc. 860. And see supra, VI, C, 4, 5. Under the Louisiana act of March 25, 1831, providing that in cases where the parish or probate judge is interested or disqualified for acting, the district court shall have jurisdiction thereof, and appoint notaries or other persons to make inventories, etc., of successions, the persons thus designated by the district judge can perform only ministerial duties; and the confirmation of a natural tutor or under-tutor, together with the homologation of proceedings in the settlement of successions, are judicial acts to be performed by the district judge, and not by a notary. State v. Buchanan, 12 La. 409. Since the constitution of Michigan vests the whole judicial power of the state in certain specified courts and officers, and provides for the election of all judicial officers by the people, the legislature cannot confer any portion of such judicial power upon any officer not elective and not so specified; and therefore the act to provide for the discharge of certain duties required to be performed by circuit court commissioners, approved Feb. 24, 1853, in so far as it undertook to confer judicial powers with respect to attachments upon notaries public in certain cases, was held unconstitutional and void. United States.— Sacrider v. Brown, 21 Fed. Cas. No. 12,205, 3 McLean 481, holding that a notary's clerk cannot make the protest of the bill, although he does so in the notary's name, even where by custom he may make the demand.

Local custom.— It was shown by a notary's deposition that it was the custom of notaries in Baltimore to present bills by their clerks in Miltenberger v. Spaulding, 33 Mo. 421. Evidence that it was the universal usage in New York city for notaries' clerks to present and demand payment of negotiable paper was held admissible in Commercial Bank v. Varnum, 49 N. Y. 269, 276. "The practice in England is to present and demand by a clerk of the notary." Commercial Bank v. Varnum, supra. It appeared by the evidence that it was the usage of notaries in Liverpool to present bills by their clerks in Nelson v. Fotterall, 7 Leigh (Va.) 179.

The custom must be proved to admit the certificate. The court will not take judicial notice of a custom allowing a notary to act by deputy. Chenowith v. Chamberlin, 6 B. Mon. (Ky.) 60, 43 Am. Dec. 145. But compare Commonwealth Bank v. Garey, 6 B. Mon. VII. CERTIFICATES AND SEALS.

A. Certificates[57]—1. As Evidence. The certificates of notaries duly authenticated are evidence of those things to which the notary is authorized to certify.[58] It has been held that a notary may not contradict his own certificate,[59] but there are decisions in some jurisdictions to the contrary.[60] It may be contradicted or impeached by other competent evidence.[61] A notary's certificate of protest may be supplemented by other evidence;[62] and in a proper case, by leave of court, it may be amended or an additional certificate may be made.[63]

2. Requisites and Sufficiency. In passing on certificates, the courts are strict to insist on adherence to legal requirements;[64] but they are not needlessly exact-the duty of a notary, without the order of his client, to look to the registration of an instrument executed before him; it is one of those acts which, although they may be customarily done, do not result from the duties of the profession).

Liability of principal for default of notary as agent.— A notary acting as agent and not in his official capacity renders his principal liable for his default. Davey v. Jones, 42 N. J. L. 28, 36 Am. Rep. 505; Ayrault v. Pacific Bank, 47 N. Y. 570, 7 Am. Rep. 489. But loss that results from the wrong-doing of a notary is chargeable to his client only so far as he is actually the agent of the client in the particular transaction through which the loss occurs. Latulippe v. Grenier, 13 Quebec Super. Ct. 157, in which it was held that the filing or registration of a forged discharge of a mortgage by a notary, falsely authenticated by him, does not affect the mortgagee's rights, although the mortgagor has paid the debt upon the faith of such registration to the notary who had no authority from the mortgagee to receive payment.

(Pa.) 377, 378 (where the court said: "There is no pretence to say, that the notary-public was not a competent witness to explain, or even contradict his own certificate"); Stewart v. Allison, 6 Serg. & R. (Pa.) 324, 9 Am. Dec. 433; Adams v. Wright, 14 Wis. 408, 412 (where the court said: "The certificate and record are but presumptive evidence by statute . . . and being so, are liable to be rebutted or disproved by the testimony of other witnesses. And if by other witnesses, then why not by the notary? . . . If in thus endeavoring . . . to fortify the case made by the record, the plaintiff should . . . call forth facts which tend to disprove it and to falsify the certificate, it would become a question of veracity between the notary as a witness upon the stand, and as a public officer acting under the sanctity of an official oath, to be settled by the jury").

62. Dickerson v. Turner, 12 Ind. 223; Saul v. Brand, 1 La. Ann. 95 (holding that a defect in a certificate may be cured by evidence); Morris v. Foreman, 1 Dall. (Pa.) 193, 1 L. ed. 96, 1 Am. Dec. 235. And see Dutchess County Bank v. Ibbotson, 5 Den. (N. Y.) 110 (holding that where a notarial certificate of protest cannot be produced proof must be made by evidence); Rosson v. Carroll, 90 Tenn. 90, 16 S. W. 66, 12 L. R. A. 727 (holding that a notary cannot prove notice of non-payment by testifying to his mere impression, but admitting that he may prove such fact by his testimony if corroborated by a certificate and knowledge of his own business habits). See also Commercial Paper, 8 Cyc. 278.

63. Goldie v. McDonald, 78 Ill. 605, 606 (where a notary of another state was permitted to amend his certificate; the court said: "The amendment to the certificate of the notary to the affidavit of claim, it being under his official seal, made it prima facie evidence, under the statute, that the oath required by law to be made was taken before such officer"); Bohn v. Zeigler, 44 W. Va. 402, 29 S. E. 983 (holding that an affidavit for an attachment, made before a notary of another state, without a certificate from a clerk or other officer of a court of record of that state under official seal verifying the genuineness of the notary's signature and his authority to administer an oath, as required by Code, c. 130, § 31, was bad and subject to be quashed, but that it might be amended, by leave of court, by appending to it such further certificate).

64. O'Connell v. Walker, 1 Port. (Ala.) 263, 265 (where under a statute providing that "the protest of a notary public, which shall set forth a demand, refusal, non-acceptance, or non-payment of any inland bill of exchange, or protestable security for money or other things, and that legal notice, expressing in the said protest, the time when given of such fact or facts, was personally

ing as to points of form, and frequently indulge in presumptions of regularity in aid of certificates.[65] Notaries are only to be held to reasonable certainty in the or through the postoffice, given to any of the parties entitled by law to notice, shall be evidence of the facts it purports to contain," it was held that a protest stating notice to H, agent of O C, was not evidence of notice without proof aliunde of the agency); Walker v. Turner, 2 Gratt. (Va.) 534 (where under a statute providing that a protest made by a notary public stating the time, place, and manner of presenting the paper and of giving notice of the protest thereof, proved by the affidavit or solemn affirmation of such notary public made before a justice, may be read as evidence, it was held that the protest must contain all the requisite facts, and no fact which is not there contained can be proved by the affidavit); Wetmore v. Laird, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,467, 5 Biss. 160 (where, under a statute requiring a notary's certificate of acknowledgment to be authenticated by the official seal, a certified copy of a deed was rejected as evidence on the ground that such copy did not show what kind of seal was affixed, and the certificate was attested "Witness my hand and seal," which might have meant a private seal).

"Nothing should be presumed in favor of a notary public's certificate of acknowledgment to a deed of conveyance; he must state all the facts necessary to show a valid official act on his part." Wetmore v. Laird, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,467, 5 Biss. 160.

65. Alabama.— Curry v. Mobile Bank, 8 Port. 360, holding that a notary, protesting a note, may describe in his certificate the place of business of a person living in the same town on whom he has served notice as "the office" of such person without more particular description, although if the notice were sent to a distant post-office a description of the place would be required.

California.— Reavis v. Cowell, 56 Cal. 588, holding that the absence of a venue is not necessarily fatal to a notary's certificate.

Illinois.— Dyer v. Flint, 21 Ill. 80, 74 Am. Dec. 73 (holding that, where the name of the county appeared in the caption, the notary was assumed to be a notary of that county, and that what purported to be a description of the seal attested by the clerk and naming another county was no part of the record); Rowley v. Berrian, 12 Ill. 198 (holding that the court will take judicial notice that the letters "N. P." mean notary public).

Indiana.— Updegraff v. Palmer, 107 Ind. 181, 6 N. E. 353 (holding that the omission of the month from the jurat of an affidavit does not vitiate it); Teutonia Loan, etc., Co. v. Turrell, 19 Ind. App. 469, 49 N. E. 852, 65 Am. St. Rep. 419.

Iowa.—Goodnow v. Litchfield, 67 Iowa 691, 25 N. W. 882, holding that where it appeared by the jurat that the notary was of a county other than that named in the caption of the affidavit, it would be presumed that the notary acted in his own county. A jurat whereon the notary's signature was followed by the words, "notary public, Kings county, — certificate filed in New York county," with a seal containing his name and the names of the two counties, was sufficiently authenticated. Goodnow v. Oakley, 68 Iowa 25, 25 N. W. 912.

Kentucky.— Harbour-Pitt Shoe Co. v. Dixon, 60 S. W. 186, 22 Ky. L. Rep. 1169, holding that the failure of a notary to state the date of expiration of his commission, a statement required by the Kentucky statute, does not vitiate the certificate.

Louisiana.— Pogne v. Hickman, 9 Rob. 158 (holding that in the absence of proof that a certificate of protest produced in evidence was not recorded by the notary, it will be presumed that he has complied with the law); Union Bank v. Penn, 7 Rob. 79 (holding that the lack of a date in a notary's certificate of protest does not prevent the certificate from being legal evidence of the authorized facts which it states); Marsoudet v. Jacobs, 6 Rob. 276.

Michigan.— Smith v. Runnells, 94 Mich. 617, 54 N. W. 375, holding that the failure of a notary to append the name of the county from which he was appointed to his signature upon the jurat of an affidavit, when the name of the county appears in the caption, does not make the affidavit defective.

Missouri.— Remington Sewing Mach. Co. v. Cushen, 8 Mo. App. 528, holding that where a notary omits his venue from the jurat he will be presumed to be of the place named in the caption.

New York.— Crosier v. Cornell, 15 N. Y. Wkly. Dig. 34, holding that where a petition verified before a notary bore the name of the county in the caption and the notary's county did not otherwise appear, he would be presumed to have acted rightly within his proper county.

Tennessee.—James v. Ocoee Bank, 2 Coldw. 57, holding that a notary's certificate of notice of dishonor need not state the time when the notice was given, the post-office from which it was sent, and other particulars, where the statute does not expressly require it. When he certifies that he has done an official act it is to be presumed, until the contrary is shown, that he has done it correctly.

Texas.— Williams v. Cessna, (Civ. App. 1906) 95 S. W. 1106 (holding that "Notary Public, W. C. S. T.," showed the official character of the person subscribing a certificate, clearly intimating that he was a notary public of Walker county, Texas); Kane v. Sholars, (Civ. App. 1905) 90 S. W. 937 (holding that venue is sufficiently stated when it appears only in the body of the certificate).

Wisconsin.—Adams v. Wright, 14 Wis. 408, holding that the expression "left at his house" in a certificate of notice of protest was sufficient to show compliance with a statutory requirement that such notice should use of language.[66] It has been held, against conflicting decisions, that the lapse of time between a protest and the making of the certificate is no ground of objection to the latter as evidence.[67] A certificate of protest altered after action brought is not evidence.[68] The effect of a notarial certificate is determined by the law of the place where it is made, and not by that of another place where the act is brought in question.[69]

B. Seals[70] — 1. Purpose and Effect. The purpose of the notarial seal is to authenticate the document to which it is duly affixed.[71] It has been said to be prima facie evidence of the notary's official character,[72] and "to prove itself,"[73] but this is not always true of a foreign notary's seal.[74] Where it appears that the proper seal has been duly affixed, although the impression is faint and in part obliterated, it is effective nevertheless to authenticate the instrument.[75] be left at the dwelling-house of the party to be served.

United States.— In re Henschel, 113 Fed. 443, 51 C. C. A. 277, holding that a certificate of protest and notice need not state particulars of service of notice.

England.— Gates v. Ruckland, 5 New Rep. 32, 13 Wkly. Rep. 67, holding that a certificate reading in form "Sworn to, and subscribed before me, A. B. Notary Public," was good, against the objection that it did not certify in the usual form that the deponents by name appeared personally before the notary and swore.

Canada.— Commercial Bank v. Brega, 17 U. C. C. P. 473, holding that a notary by writing his name before the printed words "Notary Public" adopts them, and there is no necessity for his writing them in manuscript.

66. Adams v. Wright, 14 Wis. 408.

67. Billingsley v. State Bank, 3 Ind. 375, 378 (where the court said: "The law appears to be settled that though the bill ought to be noted for non-payment on the day of the refusal to pay, still the protest may be drawn up at any time before the trial, and antedated accordingly"); Cayuga County Bank v. Hunt, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 635, 648 (holding that it is immaterial how long after notice was given a notary's certificate of protest is made. The court said: "It is no objection that the certificate of notice was drawn up by the notary two years, or any other length of time after notice was given. The statute gives it as a substitute for his personal testimony at the trial. It is properly called for and may be drawn up when it happens to be wanted as evidence); Bailey v. Dozier, 6 How. (U. S.) 23, 12 L. ed. 388 (holding that when a bill has been duly noted for non-acceptance, the protest may be drawn up afterward at any time before trial). Contra, Chatham Bank v. Allison, 15 Iowa 357 (holding that a notary's certificate, unless it consists in authenticated copies of the notarial record, must be made at the time of the protest); Winchester v. Winchester, 4 Humphr. (Tenn.) 51 (holding that a certificate of a notary written a year after the protest does not constitute any part of the protest and therefore is not evidence under an act declaring a notary's protest prima facie evidence of the fact of notice).

Evidence of delay.— Delay between the protest and making of the certificate must appear affirmatively in order to be considered by the court. Fleming v. Fulton, 6 How. (Miss.) 473.

68. Aiken v. Cathcart, 2 Speers (S. C.) 642. But compare Marsoudet v. Jacobs, 6 Rob. (La.) 276, holding that corrections in a notary's protest do not render it void.

J. K. B. O. S. 199, 21 E. C. 2. When Required. The official acts of a notary must generally, by express statutory provision, be authenticated by his official seal,[76] and the seal was necessary under the common law,[77] but not under the civil law.[78] Where, however, a seal required by the Ohio statute to be one inch and one quarter in diameter, surrounded by the words "notarial seal, county Ohio," and to contain so much of the state coat of arms as to show the mountain range, the rising sun, the bundle of arrows, and the sheaf of wheat, which impression by the aid of a magnifying glass showed all the emblems except the arrows, and all the words except that O was used instead of Ohio; bore upon its face the evidence of a genuine certificate and was sufficient to admit in evidence the deed to the certificate of acknowledgment of which it was attached.

statute provides for authentication of notarial acts without requiring a seal, the seal is not necessary.[79] The need of a notary's seal for the purpose of admitting documents in evidence depends upon the lex fori;[80] but the validity of a protest of a bill of exchange depends on the lex loci contractus, and when the law of the place where such bill is made requires that a protest be under seal its validity elsewhere will depend upon the seal.[81]

84. Kirksey v. Bates, 7 Port. (Ala.) 529, 31 Am. Dec. 722, holding that when a statute prescribing the particulars of notaries' seals is void or obsolete, the notary has the right at common law to provide his own seal.

85. Rochester Bank v. Gray, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 227; Orr v. Lacy, 18 Fed. Cas. No. 10,589, 4 McLean 243, 247 (where it is said that it is only necessary that the notary's seal "should conform to the law of the place where [it is made] . . . An impression on the parchment or paper, with an intent to make a seal, is good at common law"); In re Phillips, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 11,098.

Statute held merely directory.— In Sonfield v. Thompson, 42 Ark. 46, 48 Am. Rep. 49, where one statute required that notaries should certify under their official seals the truth of all matters and things done by virtue of their office, and another prescribed certain emblems, devices, and legends which the impression of the seal should present, and it was held that the latter provision was merely directory and that a seal obviously designed as an official seal, although not complying with the prescribed requirements, did not invalidate the certificate of acknowledgment on which it was impressed.

state will presume the requirements of another state concerning notarial seals to be the same as in their own jurisdiction.[86] Where a notarial seal is required, one which is not notarial is ineffective.[87] The use by one notary of the seal of another is not necessarily fatal.[88] Slight variations from the legal requirements as to form of a seal may not invalidate the notarial certificate.[89] It seems that an impossible requirement may invalidate a whole statutory provision prescribing various requisites of notarial seals.[90] In the absence of any statutory requirement to the contrary, it seems that no device or words indicative of the notary's official character are essential to the seal.[91] In the absence of a statutory provision the notary's name need not be a part of his seal,[92] but the name may be a statutory requisite.[93] The seal may consist in an impression on paper or some other sub-

86. Hewitt v. Morgan, 88 Iowa 468, 53 N. W. 478 (where under the Iowa statute requiring the notary's seal to bear his name and the words "Notarial Seal," it was assumed, in the absence of proof, that the requirements of another state were identical); Neese v. Farmers Ins. But compare Rochester Bank v. Gray, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 227, where a protest made in Massachusetts was rejected because the seal was a mere impression upon the paper and it was not shown that any law of Massachusetts authorized a seal so made.

87. McKellar v. Peck, 39 Tex. 381, where, under a statute declaring that no official act should be valid without the notary's seal of office, it was held that an acknowledgment to which the notary inadvertently affixed the seal of the county court was invalid.

88. Muncie Nat. Bank v. Brown, 112 Ind. 474, 14 N. E. 358, where it was held that the use by a notary of a seal borrowed from another, and somewhat different from his own, did not invalidate the certificate of acknowledgment to which it was affixed, where both were mere general seals without marks or names peculiar to either notary. But compare In re Nebe, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 10,073, where the court, in holding that a notary's seal which did not bear his name did not fulfil the requirement that his act be authenticated by his official seal, said: "If it be admitted that the seal in this case is the seal of a notary public, it is just as clearly the seal of every other of the notaries public, in number about one thousand, who hold office in the county of Wayne; and what then becomes of the provisions of the law which require the notary's act to be attested by 'his official seal'"?

89. Lange v. State, 95 Ind. 114 (holding that when it is not required by statute that the notary's seal shall bear the name of his county, a seal bearing the words, "Notary Public, Seal," and the name of the state, sufficiently indicates the character of the office); Stringfellow v. Thomson, 1 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 1008 (holding that the seal of a Texas notary which had the letters "Texas" placed between the several points of the star instead of around the extreme margin was a substantial compliance with the statute).

90. Kirksey v. Bates, 7 Port. (Ala.) 529, 31 Am. Dec. 722, where it was held that, under a statute of the territory which became the state of Alabama, and where there is still in force a provision prescribing various requirements for notaries' acts, an impossible requirement that such seal shall bear the arms of the territory, when neither the territory nor state had any legally authorized arms, was therefore obsolete, so that the further requirement that the seal should bear the notary's name or initials was also of no effect, and the notary was at liberty, at common law, to provide his own seal.

91. In re Phillips, 19 Fed. Cas. No. 11,098 (where the court said: "We even think that any impression made upon sealing-wax or wafer adhering to the paper, without any device or words indicative of the particular official, would be equally entitled to judicial sanction as evidence of the notarial or official character of the individual signing his name as 'Notary Public, Lucas Co., Ohio'"); Commercial Bank v. Brega, 17 U. C. C. P. 473 (where it was said that any seal which the notary designates was sufficient under the statutes of Upper Canada, and the protest of a note signed with the name of a notary opposite an ordinary but not official seal with the printed words, "Notary Public," under the same was held good).

93. Neese v. Farmers Ins. Co., 55 Iowa 604, 8 N. W. 450 (where it was held that a notary's seal not bearing his name, on a deposition taken in Nebraska, was insufficient, on the assumption, in the absence of proof to the contrary, that the Nebraska law was the same as that of Iowa); Gage v. Dubuque, etc., R. Co., 11 Iowa 310, 77 Am. Dec. 145 (where it was held that a notary's seal must bear and impress the notary's name; and that writing the name upon the impression was not sufficient); In re Nebe, 17 Fed. Cas. No. 10,073. But compare Weeping Water v. Reed, 21 Nebr. 261, 31 N. VIII. RECORDS.

A notary's official record is a public record,[96] and a certified copy is evidence of the facts officially recorded.[97] A notary's records, not treated as official, are admitted on due proof, as original memoranda made in regular course,[98] and it has

shall be engraved the words "notarial seal," the name of the county for which he was appointed and commissioned, and the word "Nebraska" and in addition, at his option, his name or the initial letters of his name, was interpreted as meaning that the option was not a mere choice between the name and the initials, but an option as to whether or not he should use the name or initials at all; therefore the lack of such name or initials on the seal did not vitiate a certificate of acknowledgment.

New Orleans — Custody of records.— Under a statute providing that the custodian of notarial records shall hold the records of every notary, in the parish of Orleans, functus officio, it was held that a notary, son of a deceased notary, had no right to the notarial records of his father either as his son or as a notary (State v. Theard, 45 La. Ann. 680, 12 So. 892; State v. Laresche, 24 La. Ann. 148), even as surviving partner in the notarial business (State v. Theard, supra). (U. IX. DUTY.

A. In General. A notary owes his clients the general duty of integrity, diligence, and skill,[1] and it is the notary's duty to inform himself of the facts to which he intends to certify, and not rely on hearsay.[2] The official duty of a notary does not extend beyond the limits of the place for which he is appointed.[3]

B. In Regard to Commercial Paper. When protest and accompanying acts are not part of the notarial function, the notary's duty is not that of notary, but of agent.[4] In either capacity, however, it is his duty to use reasonable diligence to act effectively.[5]

P. 400 (where a copy of a power of attorney certified under the corporate seal of the board of notaries in and for the district of Montreal, signed by the secretary of the board as a true copy of the original power of attorney found in the notarial records of a deceased notary of Lower Canada there named — his records being deposited in the archives of said board — was admitted in evidence in Lower Canada, and the inference was that it must have been acted on and come officially into his hands, although there was no proof that any act or conveyance was passed under it before said notary). To send notice of protest of a bill from abroad to a drawer is no part of a notary's official duty. Ewing v. Cameron, supra. A notary who undertakes to give notice, although that is not under the statute his official duty, "should state the person notified; the manner of notification, and when not served on the party in person, it should specify distinctly whether it was delivered at his house or place of business; or if sent by mail, that it was addressed to the post-office nearest to him, or at which he usually received his business letters." Hatton v. Holmes, 97 Cal. 208, 31 Pac. 1131 (holding that under a statute providing that the acknowledgment of an instrument must not be taken unless the officer taking it knows, or has satisfactory evidence on the oath or affirmation of a credible witness, that the person making such acknowledgment is the individual who is described in and who executed the deed, a notary has no right to certify that he knows a person whom he does not know on the mere introduction of a third party); State v. Meyer, 2 Mo. App. 413, 420 (where the court said: "It is not easy to give a definition of what will constitute 'personal knowledge.' Every one knows that two intimate friends, who have known each other from childhood to mature age, living in the same neighborhood all that time, may, in the fullest and most unreserved sense, be said to have such 'personal knowledge' of each other. But, if a stranger be introduced by a respectable person into any company, it is generally safe to assume that he is what he professes to be, although the person making the assumption has nothing for it but his reliance in the habits of accuracy of the introducer, who, in his turn, may be relying on similar habits in someone else, on whose information he has made the last introduction. It is obvious that, when an officer taking an acknowledgment and making a certificate assumes any such fact, he does it at his own risk. The law warns him, when he has not 'personal knowledge' of his own, to resort to certain observances which the law supposes to be sufficient in practice to prevent imposition. The very lowest of these observances is proof by two witnesses who possess such personal knowledge of the identity of the cognizor with the grantor; for the statute says, cautiously, 'at least two credible witnesses.' Hence we see that, in a case of any doubt, it is not only permissible, but imperative, that the number of witnesses should be increased; that, not only their number, but their credit, must be looked to by the officer; that, as their testimony is to be taken, they must be sworn; and that, to secure them for future reference, their names and places of residence must be stated in the certificate. An officer taking all these precautions may, of course, be still deceived, and so be led to make a certificate that is calculated to mislead. But such a certificate is infinitely less likely to deceive or mislead than a declaration that the party making the acknowledgment is well known to the officer making the certificate. It puts all persons upon inquiry, and furnishes a clue for conducting it; and it complies with the law. If, after all, the party making the acknowledgment proves to be an imposter, the officer would, we think, if acting in good faith, stand excused"). But compare Overacre v. Blake, 82 Cal. 77, 22 Pac. 979, where it was held that the fact that the person was introduced to the notary as bearing the name of the real owner of the property and as the signer of the deed exonerated the notary of negligence in failing to identify him further. See also ACKNOWLEDGMENTS, 1 Cyc. 562 et seq., 628.

Proof of identity.— It has been held, pursuant to statute, that a notary who relies on the mere introduction of a friend or acquaintance of the person who makes an acknowledgment certifies at his own risk. He should require at least two witnesses to identify a party personally unknown to him. State v. Grundon, 90 Mo. App. 266; State v. Balmer, 77 Mo. App. 463. Where there is a description of the person in the deed it is the notary's duty to identify him by that description so far as it goes. State v. Thompson, 81 Mo. App. 549. Under statute it was held the duty of a notary, if he did not know the identity of the party before him, to take evidence respecting it in a prescribed form, and to preserve that evidence in the name of a witness in a particular mode. State v. Plass, 58 Mo. App. 148. Under a statute requiring either knowledge or satisfactory evidence of the party acknowledging the conveyance, it was held that, while evidence must of course be on oath, knowledge, within the meaning of the act, might be acquired through the introduction of a trusted acquaintance. 7. Tete's Succession, 7 La. Ann. 95 (where the court said that it is the duty of a notary at the execution of an authentic act, if a party does not know how to sign, to cause him to affix his mark); Léveillé v. Kauntz, 4 Quebec Pr. 358, 360 (where the court said that considering that notaries are bound to receive all the acts to which the parties ought, or may wish, to give authenticity, it follows that they ought necessarily to be present at the entire execution (confection) of the act); Morin v. Brodeur, 9 Quebec Super. Ct. 352 (holding that a notary is bound to invest the instrument passed by him with all the intrinsic formalities required by law).

Must state house in which contract was passed.— A statute in force in Quebec, providing that notaries "shall be bound to state in their contracts . . the house where the contracts were passed," if it applies to a case where the acknowledgment or signature of some of the parties has been taken at one house, and the acknowledgment and signature of other parties at another house, and where the notary signs and passes the act, so far as his signature is the mode of passing it, after the last acknowledgment or signature, meaning that the proper place to be served is the house where the contracts are passed, is that in which the notary completes the contract by affixing his own signature. Such has been the custom of notaries in Quebec. Hamel v. Panet, 2 App. Cas. 121, 149, 46 L. J. P. C. 5, 35 L. T. Rep. N. S. 741.

In stating the date of a notarial act the notary may state the date of the last signature by a party as the date of the act. To affix any other date, save to indicate, if he thinks proper, the date of his own signature as well, is illegal and the act so wrongly dated is not authentic. Ordway v. Veilleux, 22 Quebec Super. Ct. 197.

To be present at the performance of every requisite formality of the act is a notary's duty. Léveillé v. Kauntz, 4 Quebec Pr. 358.

Need not look to registration.— It is not the duty of a notary, without the order of his client, to look to the registration of an instrument executed before him; it is one of those acts which, although they may be customarily done, do not result from the duties themselves of the profession. Morin v. Brodeur, 9 Quebec Super. Ct. 352.

8. It is the duty of a notary to explain to an illiterate grantor, if he has reason to believe that he does not understand the legal and equitable obligations imposed by a deed and consequent upon its execution, its nature and effect; particularly when the deed is prepared at the instance and by the instruction of the vendee who will be benefited by its indirect effect. Ayotte v. Boucher, 9 Can. Sup. Ct. 460. And see Cloutier v. Dulac, 24 Quebec Super. Ct. 153 (holding that in a case where the parties to a deed cannot sign their names and a witness signs for them, the act, in order to be authentic, must make it appear that it was read to the parties before the witness or must show clearly that the consent of the parties was given in the presence of the witness who has signed); Morin v. Brodeur, 9 Quebec Super. Ct. 352 (holding that a notary owes his counsel to the parties more especially to such as are illiterate). And see Tete's Succession, 7 La. Ann. 95, where it is said that it is a notary's duty to cause a person who cannot write to make his mark.

9. Morin v. Brodeur, 9 Quebec Super. Ct. 352, holding that a notary after having received the signature of the parties has no right to fill in blanks which has been left in the document, although the parties have furnished him with particulars for that purpose, and that to do so would be a serious irregularity.

Form of bond.—Where the statute provided that the notary's bond should be made payable to "the State of California" a bond made payable to "the People of the State of California" was held good. Tevis v. Randall, 6 Cal. 632, 633, 65 Am. Dec. 547. See, generally, OFFICERS.

Seal on bond.— A bond without a seal is held not to be a notary's bond within the meaning of the statute. Van de Casteele v. Cornwall, 5 Cal. 419.

Condition of bond.— Under a statute which prescribed no condition for the notarial bond, but declared that a notary should be liable on his bond for any misconduct or neglect of duty, it was held that the only condition that should be inserted in such bond was the faithful performance of duty. Tevis v. Randall, 6 Cal. 632, 65 Am. Dec. 537. A condition that the notary shall "well and truly perform and discharge the duties of a Notary Public according to law" embraces every act which he is authorized or required by law to do in virtue of his office. Fogarty v. Finlay, 10 Cal. 239, 70 Am. Dec. 714.

Joint and several bond.—Where the statute provides that the bond shall be joint and several, and a bond is given which is joint and not several, the sureties cannot defend themselves from liability on the ground that the bond does not comply with the statute. Tevis v. Randall, 6 Cal. 632, 65 Am. Dec. 547. The surety on a joint and several notary's bond may be sued independently of the principal. People v. Butler, 74 Mich. 643, 43 N. W. 273.

11. California.— Heidt v. Minor, 113 Cal. 385, 45 Pac. 700 (false certificate of acknowledgment); Fogarty v. Finlay, 10 Cal. 239, 70 Am. Dec. 714 (defective certificate of acknowledgment); Tevis v. Randall, 6 Cal. 632, 65 Am. Dec. 547 (failure to give notice of protest to indorsers).

Kentucky.—Mulholland v. Samuels, 8 Bush 63, holding, however, that under a statute requiring a notary to give or send notice of dishonor to parties providing that if any notary public shall falsely state in such protest that notices were given or sent by him he shall be liable to the party or parties injured for such damages as they may sustain by such false statement, a notary is not liable either under said statutes or otherwise for sending the notices instead of delivering them to persons living in the city of his residence when he was not aware that they lived there.

Louisiana.— Stork v. American Surety Co., 109 La. 713, 33 So. 742 (neglecting to attend to the cancellation of notes delivered to a notary for that purpose, which notes he fraudulently negotiated); Weintz v. Kramer, 44 La. Ann. 35, 10 So. 416 (neglect in the taking of a will in nuncupative form by public act); Rochereau v. Jones, 29 La. Ann. 82 (fixing his official certificate to notes of his own forging). When a notary who had represented to a client that he would loan money for her on a mortgage and had received money from her for that purpose showed her a forged mortgage under mark of his official paraph or certificate to persuade her that he had passed such a mortgage, he was held liable on his bond for having undertaken to do an official act, that is to pass a mortgage. It was a breach of official duty to do so. Nolan v. Labatut, 117 La. 431, 41 So. 713.

Michigan.— People v. Butler, 74 Mich. 643, 42 N. W. 273 (false certificate of acknowledgment); Curtiss v. Colby, 39 Mich. 456 (false certificate of acknowledgment).

Missouri.— State v. Plass, 58 Mo. App. 148, false certificate of acknowledgment.

Nebraska.— Williams v. Parks, 63 Nebr. 747, 89 N. W. 395, failure to give notice of dishonor.

Tennessee.— Wheeler v. State, 9 Heisk. 393, failure to give notice of protest.

"Before a notary and his surety can be held, it is necessary therefore to determine whether the act done or not done, committed or omitted, was or not authorized by law, was or not incumbent upon him, was or was not required of him, whether he was directed to do it, whether he has failed to discharge the duty, and whether injury has been sustained." Schmitt v. Drouet, 42 La. Ann. 1064, 1067, 8 So. 396, 21 Am. St. Rep. 408 [quoted in Weintz v. Kramer, 44 La. Ann. 35, 10 So. 416].

For good faith and competency.—In Weintz v. Kramer, 44 La. Ann. 35, 10 So. 416, it was held that a bond with the condition that the notary "shall well and faithfully discharge and perform" his official duties, undertakes not only his good faith, but also, by force of the word "well," his competency. But compare Browne v. Dolan, 68 Iowa 645, 27 N. W. 795; Scotten v. Fegan, 62 Iowa 236, 17 N. W. 491 (in both of which cases, under a statute imposing liability on an official in case of knowingly making a false certificate of acknowledgment, it was held that a notary was not liable where knowledge of falsity was shown); Com. v. Haines, 97 Pa. St. 228, 39 Am. Rep. 805; Henderson v. Smith, 26 W. Va. 829, 53 Am. Rep. 139 (both holding that a notary who made erroneous certificates of acknowledgment in good faith was not liable for loss caused thereby on the ground that the act was judicial).

Liability for making false certificate of acknowledgment see ACKNOWLEDGMENTS, 2 Cyc. 628.

Unofficial acts not covered.— A notary's sureties are not liable for money which he has fraudulently obtained and withheld, since receiving money for his client is not his official duty. Heidt v. Minor, 89 Cal. 115, 26 Pac. 627. So a notary's surety is not liable for money received from his client for invest-notary's official negligence or misconduct may recover on the bond,[12] but this statement is too broad.[13] The measure of damages is the loss sustained by the notary's wrongful act or omission.[14] A surety upon a joint and several notary public's bond may be sued for a breach of its conditions without a prior adjudication against the principal, nor need the principal be joined as a defendant in the suit.[15]

B. Actions Against Notaries. For breach of an official duty a notary and his sureties are liable on his bond;[16] and for injury accruing through his fault in undertakings which are no part of his official function a notary is liable to an ment or payment to others and appropriated by the notary, for receiving money for investments is not a part of the notary's function. Nolan v. Labatut, 117 La. 431, 41 So. 713; Monrose v. Brocard, 20 La. Ann. 78; Lescouzeve v. Ducatel, 18 La. Ann. 470. The sureties on a notary's bond executed in 1884 were held not liable for his act in falsely indorsing in 1888 upon mortgage notes forged by himself in 1883, a statement that payment had been prolonged by an act to him. Schmitt v. Drouet, 42 La. Ann. 1064, 8 So. 396, 21 Am. St. Rep. 408. Where a notary, employed to loan money for for his client, authorized fictitious securities for the money which he embezzled, it was held that his trustees were not liable for the loss, since the employment as a loan agent was unofficial. His only official misconduct was the certifying false indorsements to fictitious mortgages, and that, it was held, was not the direct cause of the loss. State v. Boughton, 58 Mo. App. 155. See also Vandewater v. Williamson, 13 Phila. (Pa.) 140, 6 Wkly. Notes Cas. 350, holding that a notary is not liable on his bond for neglect of an extra-official act in which he is merely the agent of the party employing him.

12. State v. Thompson, 81 Mo. App. 549, where it appears that by statute in Missouri it has been provided that a notary's bond "may be sued on by any person injured."

13. See State v. Plass, 58 Mo. App. 148 (where the court said of the statute providing that the bond may be sued on by any person injured that, while it did not limit the right of action to one who had sustained pecuniary injury, it did limit it to one directly affected by the notary's act, although he might stand in no contractual relation with the notary); Ware v. Brown, 29 Fed. Cas. No. 17,170, 2 Bond 267 (holding that the second assignee of a leasehold, injured by the fact that his assignor had taken a fraudulent assignment, could not recover from a notary alleged to have knowingly certified the false acknowledgment on the ground of remoteness of interest).

No action without injury.— A person who is not injured by a notary's act of omission has no right of action on the bond. Coffin v. Bruton, 78 Ark. 162, 95 S. W. 462 (holding that no action lies upon a notary's bond for falsely certifying the execution of the assignment of a mere pretended right); Smith v. Maginnis, 75 Ark. 472, 89 S. W. 91 (holding that one who purchased pretended homestead rights from persons who did not own them had no right of action on a notary's bond for falsely certifying that those persons swore to affidavits preliminary to the allowance of such rights by the federal government); Dwyer v. Woulfe, 40 La. Ann. 46, 3 So. 360; Warren Bank v. Parker, 8 Gray (Mass.) 221.

Other existing remedies.— A mortgagee suing on a notary's bond for injury through negligence in certifying the acknowledgment of the mortgage must show substantial damage, and, unless the remedy on a mortgage note has been exhausted, can recover only nominal damages. State v. Thompson, 81 Mo. App. 549. But compare Curtiss v. Colby, 39 Mich. 456, holding that damages for injury caused by a false certificate are not to be reduced by the fact that plaintiff might have protected himself by redeeming a prior mortgage.

action as an agent to his principal.[17] A notary is not liable for a mere mistake of law where he has exercised due diligence to ascertain what the law is;[18] and a notary acting in good faith and officially is not liable for not doing that which he had no instructions to do.[19]

C. Limitations of Actions. Actions against notaries as such or as public officers are often subject to special statutes of limitations.[20]

And an action of assumpsit has been sustained against a notary for negligence in an unofficial duty relating to protest of commercial paper. Bowling v. Arthur, 34 Miss. 41.

No action without injury.—A holder has no cause of action where he has sustained no injury. Warren Bank v. Parker, 8 Gray (Mass.) 221. If the holder is fully advised independently of his notice of a ground of sustaining his action against an indorser he cannot recover for negligence as to notice. Franklin v. Smith, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 624.

No action lies against a notary where the holder is in fault, as where the holder has allowed the statute of limitations to run. Emmerling v. Graham, 14 La. Ann. 389.

Nor where the holder gives erroneous instructions.— "The notary is not presumed to be a lawyer who is to revise or reverse the decision of his employer as to the character of the bill, and whether it is entitled to grace or not." Commercial Bank v. Varnum, 49 N. Y. 269, 279.

Nor in default of instructions.— Vandewater v. Williamson, 13 Phila. (Pa.) 140, 6 Wkly. Notes Cas. 350.

In Lower Canada a notary is not properly made defendant in an action to set aside a fraudulent conveyance which he has merely been instrumental in making, when it does not appear that he has anything to do with the fraud. Clement v. Catafard, 8 Rev. Lég. 624. When a notary passes a deed lacking a detail requisite to registration, good nevertheless as an instrument between the parties, believing that the latter use is intended he is not liable for negligence for such omission. Morin v. Brodeur, 9 Quebec Super. Ct. 352. The notary is not liable for an omission which the client has refused to allow him to correct. Bourdeau v. Dupuis, 7 L. C. Jur. 34.

18. Neal v. Taylor, 9 Bush (Ky.) 380, where a statute declaring the duties of notaries was too vague to be understood without judicial construction, and it was held that a notary who did not construe it right and thus failed to comply with it was not liable for the damages caused by this error.

19. McCoy v. Weber, 38 La. Ann. 418.

20. See the statutes of the several jurisdictions.

Accrual of cause of action and running of statute.—Where a notary public fails to give to the indorser of a negotiable note the notice requisite to charge him, the statute of limitations of six years commences to run in favor of the sureties on his official bond from the date of the default, and not from the time of its discovery or the ascertainment of the damage by the injured party. Governor v. Gordon, 15 Ala. 72. Limitation on a cause of action on a bond for fraudulent certification of an acknowledgment begins to run from the making of the false certificate. Bartlett v. Bullene, 23 Kan. 606. Where a false certificate is the result of a notary's own fraud, and he has concealed his fraudulent conduct, the statute does not begin to run until plaintiff can with reasonable diligence discover the fraud. State v. Hawkins, 103 Mo. App. 251, 77 S. W. 98. Where a notary of a bank negligently omitted to charge a prior indorser by giving notice of non-payment, and the bank was afterward sued, and compelled to pay damages by a subsequent indorser, it was held in an action against the notary that the cause of action arose on the omission, and the bank, not having sued till more than six years after, was barred by the statute of limitations, although it had paid the damages within six years before suit brought. Utica Bank v. Childs, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 238.

Against sureties.— Where an action was brought against the sureties only, and it was alleged that the statute of limitations, of which the notary had lost the benefit by concealing the cause of action, would never therefore have run in favor of the innocent sureties, the contrary was held. People v. Butler, 74 Mich. 643, 32 N. W. 273.

In Louisiana the one-year limitation as to actions against public officers does not apply to actions on a notary's bond. Weintz v. Kramer, 44 La. Ann. 35, 10 So. 416. An earlier case holds that in Louisiana a notary as a public officer has the benefit of the limitation of one year on actions brought against him. Emmerling v. Graham, 14 La. Ann. 389.

In Lower Canada a notary as a public officer is entitled to one month's notice of an action against him arising from an act done in his official capacity, provided his good

E. License. Where a notary is an officer appointed by the governor with the advice and consent of the senate, a city cannot, in the absence of express authority, impose a license-tax on the office; nor is permission to impose a license-tax on trades, occupations, and professions such express authority.[22]

XI. COMPENSATION.

The fees of notaries are fixed by statute;[23] and their charges for official services must be limited to the prescribed fees.[24] But they may make further charges for unofficial services.[25] It has been held that a notary cannot recover this sttutory compensation when he has agreed to charge less;[26] but this is doubt-faith in such act be shown. Gervais v. Nadeau, 3 Quebec Pr. 18; Lasnier v. Dozois, 15 Quebec Super. Ct. 604. Also such action is barred by a six months' statute of limitations. Lasnier v. Dozois, supra.

21. See statutes of the several states relating to notaries and public officers generally. And see Maxwell v. Hartmann, 50 Wis. 660, 665, 8 N. W. 103. It has been held that two statutes, the one imposing fine for breach of official duty, the other providing for the suspension of a notary for just cause, do not conflict, and the notary may be punished under either or both. State v. Laresche, 28 La. Ann. 26.

False notarial act.— It has been said that the offense of making a false act was punishable as a misdemeanor in office. Tete's Succession, 7 La. Ann. 95.

False certificate of protest.— It appears that, by statute, a notary making a false statement in a certificate of protest that notices were given or sent by him is to be deemed guilty of violating his official oath, and be subjected to the penalties prescribed by law at the time of enactment for false swearing. Mulholland v. Samuels, 8 Bush (Ky.) 63.

False assumption of office.— The statutory offense of falsely assuming and pretending to be a notary public cannot be committed by one acting in good faith. Brown v. State, 43 Tex. 478.

Discipline — Quebec.— The board of notaries of the province of Quebec has power to try and discipline a notary on a charge of wrong-doing amounting to felony, although it has not been legally proved and followed by final sentence of a competent court. Its decision is not a conviction of felony. Tremblay v. Bernier, 21 Can. Sup. Ct. 409.

The excess is an ill-gotten prey, which they are legally and morally bound to return; and courts of justice must frown on those who seek it. The heart of an officer cannot be supposed to be long pure, when his hands have ceased to be clean"); Harris' Succession, 29 La. Ann. 743; Hawford v. Adler, 12 La. E. 959 (holding also that Code, § 3308, authorizing a charge of fifty cents for certain services, does not apply to protest service for which the fee is fixed by section 3749 at twenty-five cents).

In Lower Canada a notary cannot hold his clients to the statutory fees, where, by uniformly charging a lower and legally customary rate, he has permitted them to engage him in reliance on the lower rate. Hebert v. Matte, 10 Quebec Super. Ct. 4. A notary has no action for compensation for useless services which he had no occasion to perform. Hart v. Pacaud, 19 L. C. Jur. 135. A notary's right to fees may be proved by the instrument for which the charge is made, signed, and executed by the parties, where such instrument is an "authentic act." Trudeau v. De Lanaudière, 7 L. C. Jur. 118.

Parties jointly and severally liable.— A provision in force in Lower Canada that parties to acts executed before notaries are jointly and severally liable for disbursements and fees does not apply to other than notarial services performed in regard to those instruments to which they are parties. Lemieux v. La Banque Nationale, 6 Quebec 84.

25. Reuscher v. Atty.-Gen., 97 S. W. 397, 30 Ky. L. Rep. 109 (where a notary at the demand of counsel took depositions in shorthand which were subscribed in that form, and afterward he was obliged to copy them in long hand for use, and it was held that he was entitled to the statutory fees for completing the original depositions and was further entitled for making the copies, to the amount allowed, by another statute, to clerks for transcribing); Ostrom v. Benjamin, 20 Ont. App. 336 (holding that a notary who is also a solicitor is not confined, in acting as a notary, to a solicitor's statutory charges).

26. Second Bank v. Ferguson, 114 Ky. 516, 71 S. W. 429, 24 Ky. L. Rep. 1298; Leach v. Hannibal, etc., R. Co., 86 Mo. 27, 56 Am. Rep. 408, both holding that a notary who had entered into employment at a fixed salary and performed notarial services as part of ful, and there is at least one decision to the contrary.[27] A notary is not entitled to a fee for an act done for him by a person not duly authorized.[28] A notary cannot recover for services in taking depositions in a case in which he was attorney for defendant, and this, even though his law partner was present representing defendant.[29] that employment and during his regular hours of service therein could not recover notarial fees.

27. An agreement between a bank and a notary public by which it is agreed that in consideration of the notary's employment by the bank he will accept in full payment for his services in protesting the bank's negotiable paper, and that held by it for collection, one half of the usual legal fees charged for such services, is void for want of consideration, and also upon the ground that it is against public policy; and such an agreement therefore is no defense in favor of the bank when sued by the notary to recover one half of his fees retained by it. Ohio Nat. Bank v. Hopkins, 8 App. Cas. (D. C.) 146.

Ordinances to deprive employees of statutory fee is void.—A notary, employed by a city, under an ordinance providing that his fixed salary for the full compensation of all notarial fees earned by him shall belong to the city, can recover from the city the fees so appropriated. Wood v. Kansas City, 162 Mo. 303, 62 S. W. 433.

28. Leftly v. Mills, 4 T. R. 170 [explained in Nelson v. Fotterall, 7 Leigh (Va.) 179, 197], where it appears that when a notary may demand a fee from the party to whom he presents a bill, but a bill is presented by a person not duly authorized, to whom the party offers to pay the amount of the bill, but refuses to pay the fee, the notary is not then entitled to his fee, and his protest is void, although it seems that if the bill were presented by himself or someone duly authorized he would be entitled to the fee and might protest the bill for a failure to pay.

I. DEFINITIONS.

A. Notice Generally. Notice, in its legal sense, may be defined as information concerning a fact actually communicated to a party by an authorized person, or actually derived by him from a proper source, or else presumed by law to have been acquired by him, which information is regarded as equivalent in its legal effects to full knowledge of the fact, and to which the law attributes the same consequences as would be imputed to knowledge.[1]

B. Actual and Constructive Notice. Notice is actual, when it is directly and personally given to the party to be notified.[2] As to whether actual notice is synonymous with knowledge the authorities are in conflict, the affirmative view prevailing in some jurisdictions;[3] but the view obtaining in other jurisdictions is that the terms "knowledge" and "actual notice" are not synonymous or interchangeable, and should not be confounded one with the other.[4] Notice is constructive when a party by circumstances is put upon inquiry, and must be presumed to have had notice; or, by judgment of law, is held to have had notice.[5]

II. MATTERS IMPOSING CONSTRUCTIVE NOTICE.

A. Facts Putting on Inquiry — 1. IN GENERAL. It is a general rule that whatever puts a party on inquiry amounts in judgment of law to notice, provided the inquiry becomes a duty, and would lead to a knowledge of the facts by the exercise of ordinary intelligence and understanding.[6] Wherever facts put a party

"Imputed by the law to a person not having actual notice." Gress v. Evans, 1 Dak. 387, 46 N. W. 1132, 1134.

"Knowledge of any fact which would put a prudent man upon inquiry." Smith v. Miller, 63 Tex. 72, 74.

"Knowledge of such facts as should induce inquiry, and as would lead to inquiry in the case of an ordinarily prudent man and which can not be neglected without a voluntary closing of the eyes, and conduct inconsistent with good faith." Hill v. Tissier, 15 Mo. App. 299, 306.

Constructive notice differs from implied notice, with which it is frequently confounded, and which it greatly resembles, in respect to the character of the inference upon which it rests; constructive notice being the creature of positive law, resting upon strictly legal presumptions which are not allowed to be controverted, while implied notice which is one of the two kinds of actual notice arises from inference of fact. on inquiry, constructive notice will be imputed to him if he designedly abstains from inquiry for the purpose of avoiding notice.[7]

2. Nature of Facts — a. In General. To charge a party with constructive notice of a fact which could have been ascertained by inquiry, the circumstances known to him must have been such as ought reasonably to have excited his suspicion and led him to inquire.[8] The general rule that constructive notice arises from facts placing on inquiry does not impute notice of every conceivable fact and circumstance however remote which might come to light by exhausting all possible means of knowledge.[9]

b. Equally as Well Referable to Different Matter. Where the circumstances relied on as sufficient to charge a party with notice may be equally as well referred to a different matter as to the one with notice of which he is sought to be charged, they will not be deemed sufficient.[10]

c. Rumors. Mere rumors of the fact in the neighborhood are not notice, rendering it obligatory upon the party to investigate them.[11]

See 37 Cent. Dig. tit. "Notice," § 4.

Inquiry useless.—Where a party could not have learned the facts by inquiry, he is not prejudiced because he did not inquire. Lower's Appeal, 1 Walk. (Pa.) 404.

Party's failure to make inquiry attributed to his own negligence.—Where a party having knowledge of facts sufficient to put him on inquiry neglects to make that inquiry, and thereby suffers loss, such loss must be attributed to his own negligence (Henneberry v. Morse, 56 Ill. 394; Clark v. Plumstead, 11 Ill. App. 57; Warren v. Swett, 31 N. H. 332); and he will not be relieved in a court of equity (Clark v. Plumstead, supra).

Proper inquiry made.—Although a party has notice of circumstances putting him upon inquiry, yet if he, with due diligence, inquires and becomes satisfied by evidence upon which a person may reasonably rely, that a fact does not exist, then he is to be regarded as acting without notice of such fact. Hoyt v. Shelden, 3 Bosw. (N. Y.) 267.

Rebutting presumption.— Where circumstances are brought directly home to the knowledge of the party, which would have been sufficient in themselves to put him on inquiry, and thus amount to notice, he will be entitled to rebut the presumption of notice by showing the existence of other attendant circumstances of a nature to satisfy the mind that future inquiry was unnecessary. 3. Time For Making Inquiry. A party put on inquiry by facts is to be allowed a reasonable time in which to make such inquiry before being affected with notice.[13]

B. Judicial Proceedings.[14] A party properly brought into court is chargeable with notice of all subsequent steps taken in the cause down to and including the judgment,[15] although he does not in fact appear and has no actual notice thereof.[16]

C. Acts of Authorized Agents of Government. Third parties are not chargeable with constructive notice of facts contained in public documents merely because they were the acts of authorized agents of the government.[17]

D. Publication or Posting of Notice.[18] Unless it may be a notice or advertisement published in obedience to some positive law or legal order,[19] the publication of a notice or advertisement, if not seen or read by the party, does not charge him with constructive notice of its contents;[20] and this rule applies even where the person sought to be affected by the notice is a subscriber to the newspaper in which the publication is made.[21] Constructive notice may be imputed to a party by posting a notice or advertisement in obedience to some positive law or legal order.[22]

E. Mailing of Notice. Constructive notice may be imputed to a party where notice is mailed to him in obedience to some positive law or legal order.[23]

III. Necessity of Notice.

before liability arises unless the contrary is expressly provided by law,[24] and proceedings have been adjudged void for want of notice, even where none was expressly directed by the statute under which they were had.[25] If it be impossible to give a notice prescribed by law such notice has been held to be unnecessary.[26]

B. Facts Within Knowledge of Party. Where a fact as to which notice might otherwise be required is one which the party has means of ascertaining from a definite known source,[27] or which is equally known to both parties,[28] no notice thereof need be given. But a party may be required to give notice where the fact is to be considered as lying more properly or exclusively within his knowledge than of the opposite party.[29]

C. Waiver of. A waiver by the party for whose benefit or protection notice should be given is equivalent to notice, and dispenses with its necessity.[30]

IV. REQUISITES OF FORMAL NOTICE.

A. In General. The general rule in respect to notices is that mere informalities do not vitiate them so long as they do not mislead, and give the necessary information to the proper parties.[31]

B. Necessity and Sufficiency of Writing. Where a notice is required by contract, and nothing is said as to the manner of notification, it may be by parol;[32] but wherever notice is required or authorized by statute, written notice is understood.[33] A statute requiring a notice to be in writing, but not requiring it to be

L. 295, holding that where a statute requires reasonable notice to be given, it does not necessarily mean that served by any designated person, is satisfied by notice served by telegraph.[34] A notice by telephone is verbal and therefore insufficient under a statute requiring all notices to be in writing.[35]

C. Length of Time — 1. IN GENERAL. Where a statute requires notice to be given, but does not specify the length of time, it will be construed to mean a reasonable time.[36]

2. WAIVER REGARDING. Merely acknowledging service of a written notice is not a waiver of the objection that it was not served in time;[37] but the rule is otherwise where the acknowledgment admits due service,[38] or due service on a certain day.[39]

D. Authority to Give. Notice required by law must be given or caused to be given by the person authorized so to do, and by none other.[40] However, where the notice is required to emanate from a given person, the fact that others joined with him in giving such notice does not vitiate it.[41]

E. Signature. Where the statute directs notice to be given in writing, a signature to the notice is essential, except perhaps where it is delivered in person by the one who should have signed it.[42]

F. Indorsement of Post-Office Address. A rule of court that all papers served must be indorsed with the name and address of the attorney does not require the address to be stated more than once upon a notice.[43] And even the failure to indorse the name and address on a notice at all is a mere irregularity, and may be waived by the attorney receiving it without objection.[44]

V. SERVICE.[45]

A. Persons to Be Served — 1. IN GENERAL.[46] Whenever notice is necessary, it must appear that it was served on the proper person.[47]

2. ATTORNEY OF PARTY TO SUIT. The general rule is that all notices in pending the notice shall be in writing, but only that as to the time or number of days it shall be reasonable.

judicial proceedings, wherein the party has an attorney, must be given to that attorney or his agent, and not to the party himself.[48] The service of a notice on an attorney after the death of a party is invalid.[49] Where the attorney for a party to a suit has died and due notice has been given to such party to appoint a new attorney, which he neglects to do, notice of any proceeding in the cause is then properly given to the party personally.[50]

3. Persons Engaged in Joint Act. If notice is required to be given to persons engaged in a joint act it seems that service upon one of such persons is sufficient.[51]

B. Timeliness.[52] When notice is deemed to be essentially necessary, it must appear that it was given in due time.[53]

C. Mode of Service — 1. In General. A statute directing the manner of serving a notice must be strictly complied with,[54] especially where the notice is to form the basis of a suit.[55]

2. Personal Service[56] — a. In General. Where a statute directing notice to be given is silent as to the manner of giving it, personal service is necessary.[57]

b. Delivery of Original or Copy. And where the statute requires that a notice be given in writing it must be served by delivery of the original,[58] or a true copy.[59]

c. Proof of.[60] A statute requiring the personal service of a notice to be proved in a particular mode must be strictly pursued.[61]

b. Character of Newspapers[64]—(i) In General. Where by statute[65] or an order of the court[66] an advertisement is required to be published in a given newspaper, publication in a newspaper printed at the same place and bearing substantially the same name will be deemed sufficient, in the absence of evidence tending to show that a newspaper is published at that place bearing the precise name of the one designated. And so long as the identity of the newspaper remains unchanged, a change of name between the time of designation and the time of publication does not render the publication invalid.[67]

(ii) Secularity. A newspaper published periodically and in general circulation, and its contents, although devoted largely to legal matters,[68] or to commerce and finance,[69] embracing things of a general and secular character, is within the meaning of the statute requiring an advertisement to be published in a secular newspaper of general circulation. And when a newspaper is issued and circulated on a secular day, the insertion therein of an advertisement required to be published in a secular newspaper suffices, although the name of the newspaper employed would indicate that it is a Sunday paper.[70]

(iii) Language. While the rule supported by the weight of authority is that where the statute is silent as to the language in which either advertisement or newspaper is to be published, the advertisement must be printed in English in a newspaper printed in the same tongue,[71] it has been held in at least one jurisdiction that publication in a German newspaper, but in the English language, is sufficient.[72]

(iv) Circulation. In order to satisfy the requirement that an advertisement shall be published in the newspaper having the largest number of bona fide yearly subscribers, it is not necessary that a subscriber shall, in order to be counted, have taken the paper for a year, so long as his subscription is bona fide and for a year.[73] Whenever an advertisement is required by statute to be published in a newspaper having the largest daily circulation, and such advertisement relates to the affairs of the municipality, the entire circulation of the newspaper, newspapers are published by the same publishing company does not cure the defect.

within and without the municipality limits, is that which is contemplated by the statute.[74]

(v) Frequency of Issue. The requirement that an advertisement shall be published in a daily newspaper is satisfied by publication in a newspaper issued every day in the week except one, whether the omitted day be Sunday or one of the week days.[75]

(vi) Place of Publication. The place of publication of a newspaper is that indicated on its face, and such paper is printed in the place so designated, within the meaning of a statute requiring the publication of a certain advertisement, and it matters not that part[76] or even all[77] of its issue is printed elsewhere, or that part of its issue is mailed elsewhere.[78] The whole of a city, village, or township in which a newspaper is published is its place of publication within the meaning of a statute requiring an advertisement to be published in a newspaper.[79]

(vii) Supplement. The publication of an advertisement in the supplement to a newspaper which in all respects conforms to the definition of a newspaper satisfies the statute requiring such advertisement to be published in a newspaper.[80]

c. Frequency of Publication. Where one week's publication of an advertisement is required, one insertion in a weekly newspaper is sufficient;[81] but where one week's advertisement in a daily newspaper is directed, an insertion in each issue thereof for a week is necessary.[82]

d. Period of Publication — (i) No Period Prescribed. Where an advertisement of sale is ordered to be made in a daily newspaper, the presumption is that the advertisement is intended to be published until the day of sale in each edition of the paper.[83]

(ii) Given Number of Successive Weeks. As to whether a requirement that a legal notice be published for a given number of successive weeks is satisfied by merely publishing it in that number of successive weeks, there is a conflict of authority, the affirmative view prevailing in some jurisdictions,[84] while in other jurisdictions it is held that the full required term must intervene between the first

(III) How Computed. In the absence of statute, the rule for computing time for the publication of an advertisement is not to reckon the first and last days inclusive, but to include one and exclude the other.[86]

e. Illegibility. The fact that a portion of an advertisement was blurred, or otherwise illegible, does not operate to vitiate the publication, where due proof of publication as required by law is made.[87]

f. Naming a Party to Whom Notice Directed. The general rule is that when notice is required by publication, it must be directed to the person, by name, who is required to be notified.[88]

g. Proof of Publication. If the affidavit or proof of publication shows that the statute requiring the publication of an advertisement was substantially complied with, such affidavit or proof is sufficient.[89] But when it is sought to conclude a party by constructive notice by publication, a strict compliance with the statute is required, and every act necessary to the exercise of a court's jurisdiction based on this mode of service must affirmatively appear in the mode prescribed by statute.[90] The certificate of the publication of an advertisement required by law to

When affidavit or proof insufficient.— An affidavit not made by the person specified in the statute requiring the publication of the advertisement (Kearney v. Chicago, 163 Ill. 293, 45 N. Dec. 783), or not stating the venue (Ullman v. Lion, supra), or not stating that the notice was published for the successive weeks required by the statute (Ullman v. Lion, supra) is insufficient.

When affidavit or proof sufficient.— Under a statute which declares that publication of legal notices in newspapers may be proved by the certificate of the publisher stating the number of times the same has been published, and giving the dates of the first and last papers containing the notice, a certificate stating that the notice "has been published five successive days in the Chicago Mail, a daily newspaper," sufficiently states the number of times the notice was published. be published is inadmissible as evidence of the publication, where such certificate was given after the publisher had ceased to be such.[91]

4. By Mail — a. In General. A party relying upon the service of a notice by mail must show a strict compliance with the requirements of the statute.[92]

b. Deposit in Street Letter-Box. Depositing a duly addressed and post-paid letter, containing a notice, in a street letter-box established by the post-office department, is equivalent to depositing it in the post-office.[93]

c. Delivery to Letter-Carrier. A properly addressed and post-paid letter containing a notice is duly mailed when delivered to a letter-carrier on his route.[94]

d. Payment of Postage. Service of a notice by mail is ineffectual, unless the entire postage legally chargeable be paid.[95]

e. Proof of. It is a general rule that when service of a notice is sought to be made by mail it should appear that the conditions on which the validity of such service depends had existence; otherwise the evidence is insufficient to establish the fact of service.[96]

5. By Posting — a. In General. The term "public place" within the meaning of a statute requiring the posting of a notice therein is relative.[97] Thus it has

Regular communication by mail.—An affidavit of service of a notice by mail must state that there is a regular communication by mail between the place of residence of the person making the service and the residence of the person on whom service is to be made, when such fact is a statutory requisite. People v. Alameda Turnpike Road Co., 30 Cal. 182.

Failure to show proper direction of notice or payment of postage.— It has been held under a statute forbidding suit without notice, but declaring that such notice may be served by depositing it in the post-office directed to defendant at his place of residence and paying full postage thereon, that an offer to prove that plaintiffs on the day named caused to be mailed to defendant a notice in words and figures following, is not an offer to show such service by mail, in that it does not include a proposal to show that the notice was directed to defendant at his place of residence or that full postage was paid, and such defect in the proof of service is fatal. Clark v. Adams, 33 Mich. 159.

Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Kuthman, 2 Tex. App. Civ. Cas. § 463.

97. Cahoon v. Coe, 57 N. H. 556.

A shoemaker's shop is not, as a matter of law, a public place, where it appears that been held that, in the absence of any place more public, a dwelling-house in a sparsely inhabited community must be deemed to be a public place for the posting of a notice.[98] But there are places, such as houses of worship,[99] inns,[1] and post-offices,[2] which will be prima facie taken to be public places for the posting of a notice, so that the party claiming otherwise must show the grounds of his objection.

b. Proof of. Where a notice is required to be posted in a conspicuous public place, it is not sufficient to prove that it was posted in a public place.[3] But when a statute requires an affidavit to show that the notice was posted in a public place, it is not necessary to specify the place, if the affidavit states that the notice was posted and that the place was conspicuous.[4] Testimony of a witness that the certificate of the posting of a notice is in his handwriting, although he does not recollect the fact of posting, is sufficient proof of such posting.[5]

VI. CONSTRUCTION AND EFFECT.

A. Construction — 1. In General. If there is any ambiguity in the terms of a notice, rendering its meaning doubtful, the doubt must be resolved against the party giving the notice.[6]

2. Notice Pursuant to Terms of Contract. A notice given under a contract must be construed according to the intention of the contract.[7]

B. Effect — 1. As to Persons Jointly Liable. Where other special notice is not made necessary by statute or by contract, a notice given to one of two parties jointly liable is binding upon both.[8]

2. Time of Making. Although a notice bears an earlier date than that of its publication, yet it becomes effective as a notice only from the latter date.[9] Where a party is entitled to notice to perform his contract, and has not stipulated or consented to have it sent by mail, a notice so served does not take effect until it is actually received.[10]

VII. PLEADING, EVIDENCE, AND QUESTIONS FOR COURT AND JURY.

A. Pleading[11] — 1. Necessity of Alleging Notice. The general rule with respect to the necessity of alleging notice is that when the matter alleged in the pleading lies peculiarly within the knowledge of the party pleading it, notice thereof should be averred.[12] But it is held that notice need not be alleged where there are other places in the community that are more public. Tidd v. Smith, 3 N. H. 178.

See 37 Cent. Dig. tit. "Notice," § 37.

the opposite party has means of ascertaining the fact,[13] or where it lies as much within the knowledge of one party as of the other.[14]

2. Sufficiency of Averments. Where notice is by law necessary, a general averment of notice is not sufficient, but the notice must be particularly set forth that the court may judge of its sufficiency.[15] Notice must also be so alleged as to make it clearly appear that it was given in due time and to the proper person.[16]

3. Aider by Verdict. In an action where the right of plaintiff to recover depends upon notice, the want of averment of notice in the declaration is cured by a verdict.[17]

4. Issues and Proof — a. In General. When the allegations of the complaint clearly indicate that plaintiff relies on constructive notice, no issue as to actual notice is made.[18]

b. Variance. Evidence tending to show either actual or constructive notice is admissible under a general allegation of notice,[19] and such an allegation is sustained by proof of either;[20] but evidence of actual notice is inadmissible under a plea of constructive notice.[21] An averment of due notice is not sustained by evidence of facts excusing the notice,[22] although an allegation of actual notice is supported by proof of waiver of notice, since the latter is equivalent to the former.[23]

B. Evidence. The rules governing evidence in civil actions generally apply in actions involving the question of notice, actual or constructive.[24]

C. Questions For Court and Jury. The question of actual notice is one of fact for the jury;[25] but whether constructive notice is imputable to a party from particular facts is a question of law for the court,[26] especially where the facts are not controverted.[27] The question of whether a particular place is a public one within the meaning of a statute requiring the posting of a notice is generally regarded as a mixed question of fact and law.[28]

VIII. DEFACING, DESTROYING, OR REMOVING PUBLIC NOTICE.

The defacing or destruction of a notice posted under a public law is indictable at common law;[29] and by statute it is usually made an offense to deface or destroy

Weight and sufficiency.— Evidence that before the retirement of a retail dealer from business he had paid his debts by checks given in his own name, and after the sale the checks were made in the name under which the business was carried on, is insufficient to establish actual notice of change of proprietorship to persons having prior dealings with the firm. Henry C. Werner Co. v. Calhoun, 55 W. Va. 246, 46 S. E. 1024. Where the question is whether a creditor had notice, before or after the creation of the debt, of a claim of adverse possession against certain property of the debtor, evidence by one that he was not sure whether such notice was before or after, but he thought it was before, should not prevail to fasten notice upon the creditor, when the debtor had held the property over thirty years and the law vested it in him absolutely after five years. I. DEFINITION.

Novation is the substitution by mutual agreement of one debtor[1] or of one creditor[2] for another whereby the old debt is extinguished, or the substitution of a new debt or obligation for an existing one, which is thereby extinguished.[3] It is a mode of extinguishing one obligation by another — the substitution, not of a new paper or note, but of a new obligation in lieu of an old one — the effect of which is to pay, dissolve, or otherwise discharge it.[4] The doctrine is of civil law origin,[5] but early found its way into the common law.

II. NATURE AND REQUISITES.

A. In General. In every novation there are four essential requisites: (1) A previous valid obligation; (2) the agreement of all the parties to the new contract; (3) the extinguishment of the old contract; and (4) the validity of the new one.[6] A novation is a new contractual relation. It is based upon a new contract by all the parties interested;[7] and in some states it is specifically provided by statute that a novation shall be made by contract and be subject to the rules concerning contracts in general.[8]

B. Valid Existing Obligation — 1. IN GENERAL. In order that a contract of novation may be effected there must be a previous obligation to be released.[9]

This previous obligation, which is to be released, to be within the rule, must be a valid one.[10]

2. WHEN CONDITIONAL. If the original debt is conditional, and the condition is not performed, there can be no novation, because there is no original debt for which the new one can be substituted. Also, if the conditional debt is a specific thing which has been destroyed or perishes before the condition is performed, there will be no novation even if the condition should finally be performed.[11]

C. Agreement of Parties — 1. In General — a. Novation by Substitution of New Obligation Between Same Parties. To constitute a novation by the substitution of a new obligation between the same parties, there must appear the consent of both contracting parties.[12] The intention of the obligor that the existing debt should be discharged by the new obligation he enters into does not suffice. The creditor must concur in this.[13]

b. Novation by Substitution of New Debtor or Creditor — (I) In General. To constitute a novation by substitution of creditors or debtors there must be a mutual agreement among three or more parties, whereby a debtor, in consideration of being discharged from his liability to his original creditor, contracts a new obligation in favor of a new creditor.[14]

Third person in novation contract must be indebted to first.— Murphy v. Hanrahan, 50 Wis. 485, 7 N. W. 436; Gaston v. Owen, 43 Wis. 103; Fairlie v. Denton, 8 B. & C. 395, 15 E. C. L. 198, 3 C. & P. 103, 14 E. C. L. 472, 2 M. & R. 353.

In civil law.— If the old debt be void, as being, for example, contra bonos mores, then the new debt is likewise void. But if the old contract is only voidable, in some cases the new one may be good, operating as a ratification of the old. 2 Bouvier L. Dict. (Rawle's ed.) 521.

Contemporaneous agreement unnecessary. — To constitute novation it is not necessary that all three parties be personally present at the time. It is enough to show a mutual agreement by which the creditor assents, at the debtor's request, to accept another person as his debtor. Lewis v. D'Entremont, 29 Nova Scotia 546. See also Warren v. Batchelder, 16 N. H. 580.

(II) ASSENT OF DEBTOR. There can be no novation to which the original debtor does not consent, and to which he is not a party.[15] Hence without this consent and promise to pay, a new creditor can have no action against the debtor, because there is no privity between them.[16] This assent on the debtor's part is also essential for the reason that he may have a valid set-off against his original creditor of which he cannot be deprived.[17]

(III) ASSENT OF CREDITOR. To constitute a novation, the creditor must have consented to the discharge of the original debtor and have accepted the promise of the new debtor.[18]

2. HOW SHOWN. It is not essential that the assent to and acceptance of the terms of novation be shown by express words to that effect, but the same may be implied from the facts and circumstances attending the transaction, and the conduct of the parties thereafter.[19] Such consent is not to be implied merely from

Exception to rule.— Where a corporation transfers all its property, rights, and franchises to a new company incorporated with the same stock-holders and directors as the old, and the new corporation adopts the contracts and assumes the liabilities of the old, the merger of the old into the new corporation creates a novation of the debts of the old company, although the creditors have not assented to the change. In the civil law novation took place only when the contracting parties expressly disclosed that their object in making the new contract was to extinguish the old contract. Under our law novation may be inferred from circumstances without proof of an express agreement. Jones v. Austin, 26 Ind. App. 399, 59 N. To prove the assent of the creditor it is not necessary that express knowledge of the transaction be brought home to him, but that assent may be proved by circumstantial evi-

the performance of the contract by the substitute, for that might well consist with the continued liability of the original party, the substitute acting for that purpose in the capacity of agent for the original obligor.[20] So it has been held that a suit brought by the creditor against the delegated debtor is not evidence of intention to discharge the original debtor,[21] unless a demand of payment preceded the institution of the suit.[22]

D. Extinguishment of Original Obligation. A novation, like other valid contracts, must be supported by a consideration, which in this case is the discharge of the original debt.[23] If the agreement does not, or was not intended to, operate dence precisely as other facts may be similarly proved. De Witt v. Monjo, 46 N. Y. App. Div. 533, 61 N. Y. Suppl. 1046.

as a release of the original debt, it is not a novation.[24] The discharge of the old debt must be contemporaneous with, and result from, the consummation of an arrangement with the new debtor.[25]

E. Valid New Obligation — 1. In General. Where there is a novation by the substitution of a new contract for an old one, the new contract must be a valid one upon which the creditor can have his remedy.[26]

2. When Conditional. If the first debt does not depend on any condition, but the second agreement, intended as a novation, is conditional, the novation can only take effect by the performance of the condition before the debt is extinct. Therefore a novation will be prevented from taking place, not only by failure of the condition, but also by the extinction of the original debt before the condition is performed.[27]

III. Subject-Matter.

Any obligation which can be destroyed at all may be destroyed by novation. Thus legacies, judgments, mortgages, guarantees, and similar accessories are as much the subjects of novation as simple contract debts.[28] So the rules of novation apply as completely to debts evidenced by mercantile paper as to other obligations.[29]

IV. Forms.

A. In General. Novation may be effected in three ways: (1) By the substitution of a new obligation between the same parties, with intent to extinguish the old obligation; (2) by the substitution of a new debtor in the place of the old one, with intent to release the latter; (3) by the substitution of a new creditor in the place of the old one, with intent to transfer the rights of the latter to the former.[30]

B. Substitution of New Obligation Between Same Parties. Novation may take place by the substitution of a new obligation between the same parties with intent to extinguish the old obligation.[31] The question is always one of intention, and a mere change in the amount of the debt, the terms and mode of payment, the rate of interest, or the nature of the securities does not effect a novation, unless the intention of the parties to novate the obligation is clearly shown.[32] Thus it is well settled that no mere change in the form of the evidence of a debt will work a novation unless so intended by the parties.[33] At the same time it is equally well settled that, where one security is accepted by the creditor in satisfaction of another, the debt is novated.[34] A simple renewal of the original contract for the same consideration is not a novation,[35] but if a new consideration enters into the new contract, a novation takes place.[36] Where a contract of higher dignity is entered into by the parties to a former contract, the transaction amounts to a novation.[37]

C. Substitution of New Debtor. The most frequent novation is the substitution of a new debtor. To constitute this kind of a novation, there must be a mutual agreement among three parties, the creditor, his immediate debtor, and the intended new debtor, by which the liability of the last named is accepted in the place of the original debtor in discharge of the original debt.[38] Thus the receipt of a note of a third person in payment of an account,[39] the execution of a new note by a part of the makers of the old, and its acceptance by the holder in lieu thereof;[40] the substitution of a new lessee for the old one, accompanied by the discharge of the latter,[41] an assignment of wages to become due, accepted by the employer,[42] constitute complete novations. So turning a joint contract by two parties into a separate liability of one of them,[43] or vice versa,[44] works a novation of the original contract.

D. Substitution of New Creditor. To constitute a novation whereby a new creditor is substituted for the original one, there must be a mutual agreement among three or more parties whereby a debtor, in consideration of being discharged from his liability to his original creditor, contracts a new obligation in favor of a new creditor.[45] Thus the substitution of a second note payable to different payees in place of the first is a novation.[46] So a verbal assignment of a chose in action, not evidenced by any note or other writing, assented to by the debtor, who promises to pay the debt to the assignee, constitutes a complete novation.[47]

V. WHO MAY MAKE.

The consent which the creditor gives to the novation of the debt being equivalent, so far as regards the extinction of the debt, to a payment of it, it follows that only those to whom a valid payment may be made can make a novation of a debt.[48] For this reason persons who are under legal disability, minors, married women, etc., cannot make a novation;[49] and applying the principle of the common law that guardians, trustees, administrators, and executors cannot change the character of the trust funds held by them, without an order from a court of chancery jurisdiction, they too, it would seem, should not be allowed to make a novation.[50] This rule is, however, subject to the rules governing commercial paper, and it has been held that an administrator, holding a note payable to himself, may accept in lieu thereof the obligation of another, who is ignorant of the fiduciary nature of the debt.[51]

VI. OPERATION AND EFFECT.

A. In General. A novation will, if it be absolute and unconditional, amount to a direct extinguishment of the original debt,[52] with all rights and liens apper-

C. Weight and Sufficiency. A contract of novation must be proven as other contracts are.[67] Novation is never presumed, and must be clearly established by evidence of a discharge of the original debt and of an express agreement or acts of the parties, clearly showing the intention to work a novation.[68]

X. QUESTIONS FOR JURY.

Whether or not a debt has been novated is ordinarily a question of fact, and depends entirely upon the intention of the parties to the particular transaction claimed to be a novation.[69] Where there is no doubt as to the terms of the agreement it is a question of law for the court whether a novation has been effected.[70] But if the terms of the agreement are equivocal or uncertain, then it becomes a question of fact for the jury, under suitable instructions.[71]

NOVELTY. See PATENTS.

NOVITAS NON TAM UTILITATE PRODEST QUAM NOVITATE PERTURBAT. A maxim meaning "Novelty benefits not so much by its utility as it disturbs by its novelty."[3]

A maxim meaning "A new adjudication does not lay down a new law, but declares the ancient law; for a trial is a declaring of the law, and by a judgment the law is revealed anew which for a season has been veiled."[4]

I. DEFINITIONS AND DISTINCTIONS.

A. Definition. The term "nuisance" means literally annoyance; anything which works hurt, inconvenience, or damage,[1] or which essentially interferes with the enjoyment of life or property.[2]

B. Public and Private Nuisances. A nuisance is public where it affects the rights enjoyed by citizens as part of the public, that is, the rights to which every citizen is entitled,[3] whereas a private nuisance is anything done to the hurt, annoyance, or detriment of the lands, tenements, or hereditaments of another,[4]

and not amounting to a trespass;[5] thus any unwarrantable, unreasonable, or unlawful use by a person of his own property, real or personal, to the injury of another constitutes a private nuisance.[6] It will thus be observed that the difference between public and private nuisances does not depend upon the nature of the thing done but upon the question whether it affects the general public or merely some private individual or individuals,[7] and so the same act or structure may be a public nuisance and also a private nuisance as to a person who is thereby caused a special injury other than that inflicted upon the general public;[8] while on the other hand, the fact that a nuisance injures a great many persons does not make it a public nuisance, where the injury is to the individual property of each person and not to the general public as such.[9]

which are nuisances per se is limited, and by far the larger class of nuisances is that which may be termed nuisances in fact or nuisances per accidens, and consists of those acts, occupations, or structures which are not nuisances per se but may become nuisances by reason of the circumstances or the location and surroundings.[11] It has, however, been said of certain acts, occupations, or structures that they are nuisances per se in certain localities, whereas in other localities they would not be nuisances.[12]

D. Permanent, Continuing, Recurrent, and Temporary Nuisances. A permanent nuisance is one of such a character and existing under such circumstances that it will be presumed to continue indefinitely,[13] and as a rule consists of some building or structure. Nuisances consisting of acts done, or particular uses of property, may be properly termed continuing when they are of such a character that they may continue indefinitely, or on the other hand may be discontinued at any time;[14] recurrent when they occur from time to time but are not continuous or uninterrupted; and temporary when from their nature they will not be continued or repeated.

II. NATURE AND ELEMENTS.

A. In General. To constitute the condition or use of premises a nuisance some legal right, public or private, must be violated, and some material annoyance, inconvenience, or injury, either actual or implied, must result from the invasion of the right;[15] there must be, not merely a nominal, but such a sensible and real damage as a sensible person, if subjected to it, would find injurious, regard being had to the situation and mode of occupation of the property injured.[16]

B. Intent or Malice. The intent or motive of a person who erects or maintains a structure, carries on an occupation on, or makes certain uses of, his property is not material in determining whether there is a nuisance.[17] So where there is in fact a nuisance the person causing the same is liable, although he did not act maliciously or with the intent of annoying his neighbor;[18] and conversely, if a structure is lawful and not of itself a nuisance it cannot be complained of as such on the ground that it was erected and is maintained with the object of annoying a neighbor.[19] Under some statutes, however, unnecessary structures erected or

14. maintained by persons for the purpose of annoying their neighbors are declared to be nuisances;[20] and it has been held that, while certain acts done by a person in the use of his premises as a dwelling-house might not in themselves amount to a private nuisance, when the same acts are done wantonly and maliciously, for the purpose of annoying a neighbor and destroying the peace and quiet of his home, and they have such effect, they may amount to a nuisance which a court of equity will restrain.[21]

C. Negligence.[22] The question of negligence is not involved in an action for the creation or maintenance of a nuisance, and hence no negligence need be shown in order to establish defendant's liability in damages or plaintiff's right to an injunction, nor can a showing that there is no negligence defeat a recovery.[23]

In Michigan the rule is that a structure which serves no useful purpose but is erected maliciously for the sole purpose of annoying a neighbor is a nuisance (Flaherty v. Moran, 81 Mich. 52, 45 N. W. 381, 21 Am. St. Rep. 510, 8 L. R. A. 183 [following Burke v. Smith, 69 Mich. 380, 37 N. W. 838, and followed in Peek v. Roe, 110 Mich. 52, 67 N. W. 1080; Kirkwood v. Finegan, 95 Mich. 543, 55 N. W. 457]); but a structure erected for a useful purpose is not a nuisance, although malice was displayed in placing it so as to annoy a neighbor (Kuzniak v. Kozminski, 107 Mich. 444, 65 N. W. 275, 61 Am. St. Rep. 344 [distinguishing Flaherty v. Moran, supra]).

20. Rideout v. Knox, 148 Mass. 368, 19 N. E. 390, 12 Am. St. Rep. 560, 2 L. R. A. 81, holding that, under St. (1887) c. 348, declaring that any fence unnecessarily exceeding six feet in height, maliciously erected or maintained for the purpose of annoying adjoining owners or occupants, is a private nuisance, the purpose of annoyance must be the dominant motive for erecting or maintaining the fence, without which it would not have been built or maintained.

Maintaining structure erected before enactment of statute.— Under Mass. St. (1887) c. 348, defendant may be liable, although the fence for which action is brought was erected prior to the passage of the act, if the motives for allowing it to stand are malicious. Rideout v. Knox, 148 Mass. 368, 19 N. E. 390, 12 Am. St. Rep. 560, 2 L. R. A. 81, holding, however, that help given by a person in building a fence on his wife's land before the passage of the statute does not make him liable, and is not evidence that he maintains the fence.

Fence on opposite side of street.—A person cannot recover under Mass. St. (1887) c. 348, where it is shown that the fence complained of is on the opposite side of the street from his land and twenty-one feet from the nearest part of such land, counting from the center of the highway. Spaulding v. Smith, 162 Mass. 543, 39 N. E. 189.

Useful structure.—A shed thirty-two feet long, by ten feet wide and fifteen feet high, erected by an owner of land entirely on his own premises, used for storing carriages, but erected for the purpose of annoying an adjoining owner, is not a nuisance, within N. H. Pub. St. c. 143, §§ 28, 29, declaring that any fence, or other structure in the nature of a fence, exceeding five feet in height, erected for the purpose of annoying an adjoining owner, shall be deemed a private nuisance. Lovell v. Noyes, 69 N. H. 263, 46 Atl. 25.

Controlling motive.— In an action under N. H. Laws (1887), c. 91, for maintaining a structure in the nature of a fence unnecessarily exceeding five feet in height for the purpose of annoying plaintiffs, owners of adjacent property, plaintiffs could not complain of a charge that defendant was liable if he was actuated by two motives, one of annoyance, and the other of utility, if the former was the controlling one. D. Injuries From Natural Causes. In order to constitute a legal nuisance the act of man must have contributed to its existence, and so ill results, however extensive or serious, which flow from natural causes, cannot become a nuisance, in a legal sense, even though the person upon whose premises the causes exist could remove them with little trouble or expense.[24] But a person whose acts have contributed to a nuisance is liable, although natural causes may also have contributed.[25]

III. WHAT CONSTITUTES A NUISANCE.

A. General Considerations — 1. ANNOYANCE, DISCOMFORT, ETC. As a general rule every unlawful use by a person of his own property in such a way as to cause material annoyance, discomfort, or hurt to other persons or the public generally, and every enjoyment by one of his own property which violates the rights of another in an essential degree, constitutes a nuisance.[26]

2. REASONABLENESS OF BUSINESS OR USE OF PROPERTY. A fair test as to whether a business lawful in itself, or a particular use of property, constitutes a nuisance is the reasonableness or unreasonableness of conducting the business or making the use of the property complained of in the particular locality and in the manner and under the circumstances of the case,[27] and where the use made of his property

Accumulation of water.— Where, from natural causes only, water accumulates upon land in such quantities as that, in the process of evaporation, noxious and deleterious gases, injurious to the public health, and to the health of persons residing in the community, are emitted, the owner cannot be held answerable for the creation or continuance of such nuisance, nor be compelled by order of the magistrates, under Ga. by the person complained of is not unreasonable it will not as a rule be enjoined,[28] nor can a person complaining thereof recover damages.[29] But when it is established that a person is creating a nuisance the mere fact that he is doing what is reasonable from his point of view constitutes no defense.[30]

3. Locality — a. In General. The locality is to be considered in determining whether there is a nuisance, for what might be a nuisance in one locality might not be so in another.[31] Thus a business which might be perfectly proper in a business or manufacturing neighborhood may be a nuisance when carried on in a residential district;[32] and conversely a business which with its incidents might well be considered a nuisance in a residential portion of a city or village may be proof against complaint where conducted in a business or manufacturing locality.[33]

The fact that a place is a manufacturing locality does not, however, justify an extraordinary use of property, introducing a serious annoyance in addition to those arising from the ordinary uses of property there;[34] and no matter how lawful a business may be in itself or how suitable in the abstract the location may be, these things cannot avail to authorize the carrying on of a business in a way which directly, palpably, and substantially damages the property of another,[35] or causes unnecessary annoyance to persons in the vicinity,[36] at least in the absence of anything conferring a prescriptive right,[37] or of any grant, covenant, license, or privilege.[38]

b. Change in Character of Locality. It is the character of the locality at the time of the annoyance complained of that governs,[39] so that, although a locality was originally residential, if it has lost that character or become a business or manufacturing neighborhood, the annoyances incident to such a locality cannot be complained of;[40] while on the other hand the fact that an offensive trade or use of property was originally established in a place remote from buildings and public roads does not entitle the owner to continue it in the same place after houses have been built and roads laid out in the neighborhood, to the occupants of which and to persons passing along which it is a nuisance,[41] where such business or use has not been maintained long enough to establish a prescriptive right;[42] but as the city extends such nuisances should be removed to the vacant ground beyond the immediate vicinity of the residences of the citizens.[43]

4. Circumstances and Surroundings. While it may be easy to draw the line between what is and what is not a nuisance it is by no means so easy to determine whether the circumstances of any particular case ought to place it on one side or the other of that line.[44] In fact no definite rule can be given to govern all cases, but each must depend upon the particular circumstances which characterize it; and the nature of the trade or kind of annoyance, the location, the surroundings, and all the attending circumstances must be taken into consideration.[45] It has been said, however, that there is a distinction between an action for a nuisance in respect of an act producing a material injury to property and one brought in respect of an act producing personal discomfort, for while as to the latter a person must, in the interest of the public generally, submit to the discomfort of the circumstances of the place, and the trades carried on around, as to the former the same rule would not apply.[46]

5. Incidents of City or Village Life. A person who lives in a city, town, or village must of necessity submit himself to the consequences and obligations of the occupations which may be carried on in his immediate neighborhood, which are necessary for trade and commerce, and also for the enjoyment of property and the benefit of the inhabitants of the place,[47] and matters which, although in themselves annoying, are in the nature of ordinary incidents of city or village life cannot be complained of as nuisances.[48] But although people live in cities they are entitled to enjoy their homes free from damaging results by smoke, soot, and cinders, sufficient to depreciate the value of their property, in addition to rendering their occupancy uncomfortable.[49]

6. Lawfulness of Act or Business. One who uses his property in a lawful and proper manner is not guilty of a nuisance merely because the particular use which he chooses to make of it may cause inconvenience or annoyance to a neighbor,[50] and nothing which is legal in its erection can be a nuisance per

Matters proper for consideration.— Where defendants are charged with maintaining a public and common nuisance by operating an oil refinery, in a city, which emitted noxious and offensive vapors, and in which are stored and used inflammable, explosive, and dangerous oils and gases, it being denied that the business is a public and common nuisance, the character of the location where the refinery was established, the nature and importance of the business, the length of time it had been in operation, the capital invested, and the influence of the business upon the growth and prosperity of the community, are proper matters for consideration by the jury in determining whether it is a public nuisance. se,[51] nor can any lawful business be spoken of as a nuisance per se,[52] nor will such a business be enjoined merely because it cannot be carried on without some degree of offense and annoyance to those living near it.[53] But the inherent lawfulness of the act or use or business complained of is not the sole test,[54] for the mere fact that a person is the owner of the land will not justify his use of it in a way to annoy and injure others,[55] nor has any one a right to erect or maintain a nuisance to the injury of his neighbors even in the pursuit of a lawful trade,[56] or to carry on an offensive occupation to the great annoyance of one dwelling immediately near;[57] and any business, however lawful in itself, which causes annoyance to those residing in the neighborhood, materially interfering with the ordinary physical comfort of human life, may be adjudged a nuisance.[58] So an act or business which is lawful in itself may be a nuisance where it is done or conducted in a place where it necessarily tends to the damage of another's property,[59] and a business which, properly conducted, would give no legal ground of complaint may become a nuisance through being conducted in an improper manner or carried on at unreasonable hours, so as to cause unnecessary or unusual annoyance or discomfort.[60]

7. Public Utility.[61] A public nuisance cannot be tolerated on the ground that the community may realize some advantages from it;[62] and one who maintains a public nuisance cannot justify the same, or escape liability therefor, on the ground that the business which he conducts and out of which the nuisance arises is beneficial to the public.[63]

8. Necessity of Person Causing Nuisance. The plea of his own necessity cannot avail to excuse one who causes or maintains a nuisance;[64] and where a nuisance causing irreparable injury to one's health or home is shown to exist it may be enjoined notwithstanding its profitableness to the person maintaining it.[65] Neither will it serve as an excuse that the nuisance cannot be obviated without great expense on the part of defendant or that plaintiff himself could obviate the injury at a trifling expense.[66]

9. Care and Precautions Against Annoyance or Injury. If a particular use of property causes a nuisance this fact is sufficient to entitle a person injured thereby to relief;[67] and it need not be shown that defendant neglected to exercise due care or take precautions against annoyance or injury to others;[68] nor is the fact that such care was exercised or such precautions taken any excuse.[69] But although a business may be prima facie a nuisance it may be shown that it is not a nuisance in fact because it is carried on in such a manner that neither the health, comfort, nor property of any one is injured thereby.[70]

11. DISTINCTION BETWEEN ESTABLISHED AND CONTEMPLATED BUSINESS OR USE. There is a very marked distinction to be observed in reason and equity between the case of a business long established in a particular locality, which has become a nuisance from the growth of population and the erection of dwellings in proximity to it, and that of a new erection or business threatened in such vicinity;[76] and it requires a much clearer case to justify a court of equity in interfering by injunction to compel a person to remove an establishment in which he has invested his capital and been carrying on business for a long period of time than would be required to prevent the establishment of an objectionable business by one who comes into the neighborhood proposing to establish such a business for the first time, and is met at the threshold of his enterprise by a remonstrance of the inhabitants.[77] So if a person moves into a town or neighborhood where by reason of the industries established certain annoyances prevail, he will not be permitted to restrain the continuance of such industries.[78] But the mere fact that the alleged nuisance existed before the person complaining thereof erected his house or building or moved into the neighborhood does not deprive him of the right to relief or release the person maintaining the nuisance from liability,[79] at least unless continuance long which defendant is about to establish, and which complainant seeks to enjoin as a nuisance, already contains establishments devoted to noxious or disagreeable trades, is not enough to defeat the right to an injunction, unless such neighborhood has been by their continuance for years so wholly given up to such establishments that the addition of the one contemplated by defendant will not add sensibly to the discomfort.

W. 485, 13 L. R. A. 321; Youngstown Tp. v. Youngstown, 25 Ohio Cir. Ct. 518 (holding that where township trustees have erected a school-house, with notice that the city maintained a pest-house in the vicinity, they cannot have such pest-house abolished as a nuisance).

Increase of existing nuisance.—A purchaser of land near an existing cemetery, although aware that the same is a nuisance, is not bound to submit to the nuisance created by an enlargement of the cemetery. Payne v. Wayland, 131 Iowa 659, 109 N. W. 203.

No presumption of easement.— The fact that the nuisance existed when plaintiff purchased from a third person the premises injuriously affected does not raise any presumption that he purchased subject to an easement in favor of defendant, or affect the right to recover for damages accruing to the land from the subsequent maintenance of the nuisance. Lohmiller v. Indian Ford Water Power Co., 51 Wis. 683, 8 N. W. 601.

Action for injuries from explosion.— In an action for injuries to adjoining property caused by the explosion of a powder magazine, maintained contrary to law, it is no defense that plaintiff knew of the existence of the magazine when he bought his property, and that he was interested in some similar magazines in the same neighborhood. Laflin, etc., Powder Co. v. Tearney, 131 Ill. 322, 23 N. E. 389, 19 Am. St. Rep. 34, 7 L. R. A. 262 [affirming 30 Ill. App. 321].

Purchase from person complained of with knowledge of contemplated use.—Where complainant purchased of defendant the land upon which his house was built, and at the time of the purchase he was notified by defendant that it was defendant's purpose to erect a barn, complainant could not in equity abridge defendant's exercise of his lawful right to erect the barn, on the ground of a nuisance. Curtis v. Winslow, 38 Vt. 690.

Purchase subject to reserved right.—Where plaintiff's grantor purchased a block with reference to a map showing that part of the street on which it was situated was reserved for railroad purposes, and sold a half interest in part of it to plaintiff, who, after the railroad had been built, purchased the other half interest and the balance of the block, the reserved right was the only interest essential to be acquired by defendant railroad company as against plaintiff, and plaintiff could not complain of the construction of a necessary embankment by defendant as a nuisance. Evans v. Savannah, etc., R. Co., 90 Ala. 54, 7 So. 758.

ceiling in an apartment house owned by defendant, but which had been leased to plaintiff, and was in his exclusive possession, presents no element of a nuisance which would justify a recovery.[84]

13. Violation of Law. The mere fact that an act is prohibited by law does not render the doing of such act a nuisance;[85] and where a building or structure is not in itself noxious or dangerous, the fact that it is constructed in violation of a city ordinance does not render it a nuisance, entitling the owner of adjoining property to an injunction.[86] Neither does the fact that structures about to be erected and maintained on one's own land are to be so erected without a license required by law make them outlaws to be lawfully destroyed by any one or abated at the private suit of any person.[87] But where the legislature has declared a certain thing to be a nuisance it cannot be shown in justification that it is not a nuisance in fact.[88] Where the legislature has recognized that a certain kind of structure may be a nuisance, this will be taken into consideration in determining whether it is or will be a nuisance in a particular case;[89] and where, in addition to the likelihood of a structure being a nuisance, its erection in the place contemplated is a violation of a municipal ordinance, such erection will be enjoined,[90] and a structure which is in itself dangerous, and also violates a city ordinance, may be abated.[91]

B. Particular Acts, Occupations, and Structures — 1. In General. While it can seldom, if ever, be said of a particular thing that it is always and under all circumstances a nuisance, or on the other hand that it is never and can never become such, it is deemed useful to set out the views of the courts with respect to some particular matters which have been specifically passed upon.[92]

11. Billiard or Pool Rooms. A billiard or pool room is not of itself a nuisance,[11] but may become such where it causes annoyance and disturbance and injuriously affects property interests in the vicinity.[12]

12. Bituminous Coal. An injunction may be issued to prevent a party from burning bituminous coal for generating steam in his mill so near to dwellings as to cover them with soot and noxious vapors.[13]

13. Blacksmith Shops. A blacksmith's shop is not a nuisance per se;[14] and where it is near the business portion of a village it cannot be held to be a nuisance, although it is close to a residence;[15] but it may be a nuisance where erected or conducted in an improper place or manner.[16]

14. Blast Furnaces. A blast furnace may be a nuisance where it injures neighboring property.[17]

15. Blasting. The carrying on of blasting may be a nuisance where it is injurious to neighboring property-owners;[18] and a landowner may be enjoined from blasting rock off his own premises for purposes of improvement, unless he proceeds with the usual safeguards which prudent men adopt to prevent injury to adjacent owners.[19] But a railroad company which blasts rock on its own land in order to lay out its track, and exercises due care in doing so, and uses charges of no greater force than is necessary for the purpose, is not liable for damages as for maintaining a nuisance for injury to adjoining property arising merely from the incidental jarring.[20]

23. Carcasses of Dead Animals. Carcasses of dead animals are not per se nuisances;[36] but they are liable to become nuisances,[37] and a person who leaves the carcass of an animal insufficiently buried on his premises creates a nuisance as to adjoining premises.[38]

24. Carpet Cleaning. A carpet-cleaning establishment in a thickly settled neighborhood of private residences is a nuisance when the dust and moths from it permeate the neighboring houses.[39]

25. Carriage Making. Carriage making is a lawful and useful trade and not a nuisance per se,[40] but it may be a nuisance where conducted in an improper place or manner.[41]

26. Cattle-Pens or Hog-Pens and Stock-Yards. A stock-yard, cattle-pen, hog-pen, or pig-sty in proximity to dwelling-houses is considered to be a nuisance per se.[42]

27. Cellar Doors on Sidewalks. Cellar doors within the stoop line on a sidewalk, where maintained in the same position and condition for many years without any complaint from the city authorities, will be presumed to have been maintained with the city's consent, so as not to constitute a nuisance.[43]

28. Cement Works. Cement works, the operation of which injures neighboring property, have been held to be a nuisance.[44]

30. Cesspools.[50] A cesspool is not a nuisance per se,[51] but it may become a nuisance.[52]

31. Coal Sheds or Yards. A coal shed or yard is not even prima facie a nuisance,[53] although it may be so located or used as to become a nuisance.[54]

32. Coke-Ovens. The operation of coke-ovens may be a nuisance against which the owners of adjoining residence property may have relief.[55]

33. Collection of Surface Water.[56] It is an actionable nuisance to wrongfully cause the surface water of a street to collect and remain in front of another's premises, so as to injure him in the use and enjoyment thereof.[57]

34. Contagious Diseases. While an indictment for a nuisance will lie against one who conveys through or exposes in the public street a person infected with a contagious disease,[58] it cannot be held that a person sick of an infectious or contagious disease in his own house, or in suitable apartments at a public hotel or boarding-house, is a nuisance.[59]

35. Convict Labor. The working of a city's streets by hired convicts is not a nuisance.[60]

36. Cooking. Cooking is not a nuisance per se,[61] nor is the cooking of onions and cabbage necessarily a nuisance;[62] but a person may under proper circumstances be prevented from permitting odors and vapors from a kitchen to escape into an adjoining building or room,[63] and a cooking stove or range erected so near the partition wall of two houses as to injure by its ordinary use the goods of the adjacent proprietor, and render his house uncomfortable and disagreeable, is a nuisance.[64]

37. Cotton-Gins. A cotton-gin may be a nuisance where it is located near to a residence and interferes with the comfortable enjoyment thereof.[65]

38. Dairies. A dairy is not necessarily a nuisance.[66]

39. Dams. A dam is not necessarily [67] or even prima facie [68] a nuisance, but it may be or become such; [69] and it has been held that a dam erected and maintained without authority across a stream, the title to the bed of which is in the state, is per se a public nuisance, and may be abated by the state.[70]

40. Dangerous Animals.[71] It is a nuisance to keep a dangerous, ferocious, or biting animal, and to allow it to go at large.[72]

41. Dangerous Structures.[73] A structure which is so used or has been allowed to become so ruined and dilapidated as to be dangerous to passers-by or to the public is a nuisance.[74]

42. Discharge of Sewage, Filth, and Refuse. Where a person causes or allows sewage, garbage, filth, refuse, or other noxious matter to be discharged or to penetrate or drain from his premises into or on to the premises of another, there is a nuisance which entitles the latter to relief.[75] in conducting a dairy polluted a stream at the point where the dairy was situated, and if continued, "may pollute the waters" of plaintiff's reservoir, did not show a nuisance within Civ. Code, § 3479, defining a nuisance as "anything which is injurious to health, or is indecent or offensive to the senses, or an obstruction to the free use of property," and did not support a judgment abating the dairy as a public nuisance.

43. Diversion of Water. The diversion of the waters of a navigable stream may be both a public and a private nuisance.[76]

44. Dyeing Establishments. A dyeing establishment, not erected in a factory district and so operated as to injure the neighboring dwellings, is a nuisance.[77]

45. Effigies. It has been held an indictable nuisance for a person having a house in a street to exhibit effigies at his windows, attracting a crowd, which causes the footway to be obstructed so that the public cannot pass as they ought to do.[78]

46. Electric Light Plants.[79] The court will not enjoin the operation of an electric light plant in a manufacturing district,[80] but the operation of such a plant in a residential district may be a nuisance;[81] and where an electric light company operates its works so as to create a nuisance resulting in injury to the building of an adjoining owner it is liable therefor.[82]

47. Encroachments on Franchises. Continuous encroachments upon a ferry franchise are a private nuisance, properly abatable by injunction;[83] and where one has a grant of a bridge, with the exclusive right of taking toll, the erection of another bridge so near it as to materially affect it or take away its custom is a nuisance.[84]

48. Excavations. An excavation adjoining a public highway, or so near thereto that a person, lawfully and with ordinary care using the way, might by accident fall into it is per se a nuisance, unless proper means are adopted to guard against the occurrence of such accidents.[85]

49. Explosives.[86] The manufacture, storing, or keeping of explosive substances in large quantities in the vicinity of dwelling-houses or places of business is ordinarily regarded as a nuisance,[87] whether such business is so or not being,

54. Fertilizer Factories. A fertilizer factory is not a nuisance per se,[99] but may be a nuisance where so situated as to injuriously affect the health or comfort of the community by its odors.[1]

55. Fire-Engine Houses. A fire-engine house erected within a city under authority of the charter is not a nuisance,[2] although it may become such by improper use.[3]

56. Fireworks.[4] A display of fireworks in a city park[5] or a city street[6] is not a nuisance per se.

57. Foundries and Other Metal Works. A foundry is not a nuisance per se,[7] or even prima facie;[8] but iron works so operated as to materially interfere with the enjoyment of neighboring residence property have been held to be a nuisance.[9]

58. Frightening Horses. The placing on or near a highway of objects calculated to frighten horses may be a nuisance.[10]

59. Gambling Houses or Devices.[11] A gaming house is considered to be a nuisance,[12] and under some statutes gambling devices are nuisances.[13]

60. Garbage Plants. A garbage plant which casts noxious odors, vapors, and gases on the premises and in and about the dwelling of a property-owner in the vicinity is a nuisance and may be abated by injunction;[14] but a plant or furnace for the burning of garbage, erected in a suitable place under municipal authority, and properly conducted, is not a nuisance.[15]

81. Overflow of Water.[62] One who wrongfully causes water to flow upon another's land, which water would not flow there naturally, creates a nuisance.[63]

82. Overhanging Structures. A wall which overhangs or projects over adjoining property may be a nuisance,[64] and so also may be the erection of a building so close to the line between two lots that the eaves and gutters project over the adjoining lot.[65]

83. Pipe-Lines. A pipe-line for the transportation of oil is not a nuisance.[66]

84. Placards.[67] A placard paraded or posted in a public street before the door of an auctioneer, cautioning strangers to beware of mock auctions, has been held to constitute a nuisance, remediable by injunction.[68]

85. Planing-Mills. A planing-mill and other wood-working machines are not public nuisances.[69]

86. Pollution of Waters.[70] The pollution of water used for irrigation and for culinary and domestic purposes,[71] the discharge into a stream of refuse and filth which is offensive in odor and hazardous to public health,[72] or the deposit of filth and poisonous matter on land, thereby causing the pollution of percolating waters,[73]

a nuisance, there being no evidence that, in constructing such tanks, it did anything calculated to excite just apprehension of fire (that being the only ground of complaint alleged) in the minds of persons of normal nervous sensibility, and that the mere fact that injury to the rental value of plaintiff's property was caused by the location by defendant of gasoline and coal-oil tanks near his premises did not render defendant liable as for maintaining a nuisance, in the absence of any showing of negligence in the manner or locality of the use of such tanks.

87. PONDS. A pond is not in itself a nuisance,[75] although it may become such.[76]

88. POOL SELLING. The sale of pools at the race-course of a private corporation where the general public assembles constitutes a public nuisance.[77]

89. PRIZE-FIGHTS.[78] The holding of a prize-fight may be enjoined as a public nuisance.[79]

90. PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS. Works of internal improvement, erected by the state for the benefit of the citizens at large, do not become a public nuisance because they may render the neighborhood unhealthy by reason of the obstruction of running water and the consequent overflowing of the adjacent lands.[80] A person having a judgment against another for consequential damages to his lands, resulting from the erection of a public work, not touching his lands, which was carefully and skilfully erected in accordance with authority duly conferred by the sovereign, cannot have such work declared a nuisance subject to abatement.[81]

91. PUBLIC PICNICS AND DANCES. Public picnics and public dances are not in their nature nuisances.[82]

92. PUMPING STATIONS. A pumping station near a highway is not a nuisance.[83]

93. PURPRESTURES.[84] A purpresture or appropriation of what should be common or public[85] may be a nuisance,[86] but every purpresture is not necessarily such;[87] and the question whether it is so or not is one of fact to be determined by the jury or by the court sitting as a jury.[88] It has been held, however, that a permanent structure encroaching upon a public street is per se a public nuisance.[89]

94. Quicklime. Quicklime, in barrels, placed on a street for the use of a builder, is not a nuisance, although some of it escape through cracks in the barrels.[90]

95. Railroads. A railroad is not a nuisance per se, but it may become a nuisance by reason of the manner in which it is operated or the location, condition, and use of its appurtenant structures.[91]

96. Regattas. The holding of a regatta with aquatic sports on a reservoir, thereby creating a concourse of persons who trespass upon and injure adjoining property, has been enjoined as a nuisance.[92]

97. Rendering Plants. Although the business of rendering the bodies of dead animals and other matter for the purpose of manufacturing a fertilizer and the like is lawful in itself, it may be enjoined if it becomes injurious to health and comfort by reason of the unhealthy and noisome odors which arise therefrom.[93]

98. Roller Coasters. A roller coaster or gravity railroad, which causes unusual noise and deprives persons of ordinary sensibilities of peace, quiet, and rest on Sunday, located at a public resort in a quiet neighborhood which has been occupied for years by dwellings, is a private nuisance, which will be restrained.[94]

99. Saloons.[95] A place where intoxicating liquor is sold is not a nuisance per se;[96] but a liquor saloon located in a quiet residential portion of a city, thereby depreciating the value of adjoining property, may be a nuisance,[97] and a disorderly liquor saloon may be a public nuisance.[98]

28. Tuebner v. California St. R. Co., 66 Cal. 171, 4 Pac. 1162 (holding that the maintenance and use of a steam-engine for propelling cars by a cable, so that plaintiff's adjoining building is constantly shaken, its plaster cracked, and his premises are covered with soot, this being accompanied with a loud continuous noise, constitutes a nuisance); Yocum v. Hotel St. George Co., 18 Abb. N. Cas. (N. Y.) 340 (holding that an electric light engine, which might be so arranged as to confine its noise and jar to the premises of the person maintaining it, may be enjoined as a nuisance by the occupant of a neighboring house — the noise and jar interfering with conversation and sleep and making some of the occupants sick); McKeon v. Lee, 28 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 238 (holding that an injunction may be issued to restrain defendant from running his steam-engine in marble works, which he had built so closely adjoining plaintiff's premises that the movement of the engine jarred and injured plaintiff's building).

31. Poole v. Falls Road Electric R. Co., 88 Md. 533, 41 Atl. 1069.

114. Tallow Factories.[32] A tallow factory, if erected in a town or city, or a thickly settled neighborhood, or on a public highway, is a nuisance which may be abated.[33]

115. Theaters and Shows.[34] A theater or show is not a nuisance per se;[35] but it may be a nuisance where it collects a disorderly crowd,[36] and the noise and shouting are a serious annoyance to the neighbors.[37]

116. Threshing-Machines. The operation of a threshing-machine near a dwelling-house, to the annoyance of the owner and the injury of the furniture, is a nuisance.[38]

117. Tobacco Drying-Houses. A tobacco drying-house may be a nuisance.[39]

118. Toll-Houses. An abandoned toll-house has been held to be a nuisance.[40]

119. Trees. Trees near the boundary line of property and overhanging or encroaching on the property of an adjoining owner are not necessarily a nuisance,[41] although they may be or become such if they cause damage.[42] Trees in a street are not necessarily a nuisance where they do not obstruct traffic and it is in accordance with public policy to preserve them.[43]

120. Undertaking Establishments. An undertaking establishment in a populous city is not a nuisance per se, and the burden of showing it to be a nuisance in fact is upon the person complaining of it as such.[44]

121. Watching and Besetting Premises. It is a nuisance which is actionable at common law to watch or beset a man's house with a view of compelling him to do or not to do that which it is lawful for him to omit or to do at his pleasure.[45]

122. Water-Closets, Privies, and Urinals. A water-closet in a building is not a nuisance where properly constructed,[46] but may be a nuisance if defective.[47] So also a privy is not necessarily a nuisance,[48] but may become such by its location

Rep. 59, holding that the collection of a crowd of noisy and disorderly people to the annoyance of the neighborhood, outside of grounds in which entertainments with music and fireworks are being given for profit, is a nuisance which may be enjoined, although the proprietor has excluded all improper characters from the grounds and the amusements within have been conducted in an orderly way to the satisfaction of the police.

37. Reaves v. Territory, 13 Okla. 396, 74 Pac. 951 (holding that under Wilson St. (1903) §§ 2340, 2650, defining a public nuisance as performing any act which annoys a considerable number of people or offends public decency or disturbs the public peace and is injurious to public morals, the keeping of a theater in connection with a saloon where drunken, noisy, and boisterous people are accustomed to meet and sing far into the night to the disturbance of their neighbors will be enjoined); Inchbald v. Robinson, L. and the manner in which it is maintained;[49] and the use of a privy in such a way as to create a nuisance will be restrained upon suit brought by the owner of the adjoining estate.[50] A urinal is not necessarily a nuisance,[51] although it may become such.[52]

123. Wells.[53] A well may cause such annoyance and injury as to warrant its being treated as a nuisance.[54]

124. Wharves.[55] A wharf is not a nuisance per se.[56]

125. Whistles. The blowing of whistles at a factory is not a nuisance per se,[57] but may be a nuisance where results injurious to others are produced thereby.[58]

126. Wrecks.[59] If a vessel sink in a river by accident and without negligent fault chargeable to the owner and is abandoned by him, he is not bound to remove it as a nuisance;[60] but an abandoned vessel which was sunk through the fault of the person in possession is a nuisance which he may be compelled to abate.[61]

C. Particular Kinds of Annoyance — 1. Cinders and Ashes. The invasion of one's premises by cinders[62] or ashes[63] may constitute a nuisance.

2. Dust, Sand, Dirt, Etc. Dust,[64] sand,[65] dirt,[66] coal-dust,[67] sawdust,[68] or chaff[69] blown from a person's land on to a neighbor's premises may be a nuisance.

3. Fumes, Vapors, and Gases. A nuisance may consist in the causing of noxious fumes,[70] vapors,[71] or gases[72] which escape on to the premises of a neighboring landowner, or are offensive to the general public; and it is not an answer to a complaint against offensive fumes that they act as a disinfectant and are thus beneficial because the district is malarious.[73] A person is liable for causing noxious vapors to arise on and from a neighbor's lot the same as though they arose on and from his own lot.[74]

4. Heat. A structure which so heats the property of another as to render it untenantable may be a nuisance.[75]

7. Obstruction of Light, Air, and View. As the doctrine of ancient lights does not obtain in the United States,[81] a building or structure cannot be complained of as a nuisance merely because it interferes with the access of light and air to adjoining premises.[82] Neither does the mere fact that a building or structure obstructs the view of neighboring property constitute it a nuisance.[83]

8. Offense to Public Decency. A matter which is an offense to public decency is a public nuisance.[84]

it causes no actual structural injury;[94] and mere atmospherical concussion may cause such injury as to amount to a nuisance.[95] But vibration from proper acts done in an appropriate locality is not necessarily a nuisance, entitling an adjoining property-owner to relief.[96]

D. Extent of Injury or Annoyance — 1. In General. It is not every annoyance or inconvenience suffered by a property holder from what is done in his vicinity which constitutes a nuisance against which he is entitled to relief,[97] for what may amount to a serious nuisance in one locality by reason of the density of population or the residential character of the neighborhood affected, or the nature of the specific act, may, in another place, and under different surroundings, be deemed proper and unobjectionable.[98] What amount of annoyance or inconvenience caused by others in the lawful use of their property will constitute a nuisance is a question of degree, depending on varying circumstances, and cannot be precisely defined.[99] It is not necessary in order to constitute a thing a public nuisance that it should be an annoyance or injury to all citizens of the state or the municipality, but it is sufficient that it is annoying or injurious to all persons generally who are in the neighborhood.[1]

2. Substantial Character of Injury or Annoyance.[2] The injury or annoyance which will warrant relief against an alleged nuisance must be of a real and substantial character,[3] and such as impairs the ordinary enjoyment, physically, of the property within its sphere;[4] for if the injury or inconvenience be merely theoretical,[5] or if it be slight or trivial,[6] or fanciful,[7] or one of mere delicacy or fastidiousness,[8] there is no nuisance in a legal sense. Thus the law will not declare a thing a nuisance because it is unsightly or disfigured,[9] because it is not in a proper and suitable condition,[10] or because it is unpleasant to the eye and a violation of the rules of propriety and good taste,[11] for the law does not cater to men's tastes or consult their convenience merely, but only guards and upholds their material rights, and shields them from unwarrantable invasion.[12] The question in all cases is whether the annoyance produced is such as to materially interfere with the ordinary comfort of human existence.[13] It is not of course necessary that the annoyance and discomfort should be so great as to actually drive the person complaining thereof from his dwelling;[14] but if the alleged injury be a plain interference with ordinary comforts and enjoyment, there is a nuisance, no matter how slight the damage, provided the inconvenience be actual and not fanciful.[15]

3. Annoyance to Persons of Normal or Average Sensibilities. In determining whether an annoyance is such as to constitute a nuisance, the question is as to the effect which the matters complained of would have upon persons of ordinary health,[16] normal or average sensibilities,[17] and ordinary tastes and habits[18] and mode of living,[19] and not as to its effect upon persons of delicate or dainty habits of living[20] or fanciful or fastidious tastes,[21] or upon persons who are delicate,[22] afflicted with disease,[23] bodily ills,[24] or abnormal physical conditions,[25] of nervous temperament,[26] or peculiarly sensitive to annoyance or disturbance[27] of the character complained of.[28] Neither, on the other hand, can the notions of comfort entertained by persons whose habits, tastes, or condition are such that they are not sensible of any annoyance be adopted as a standard.[29]

as in a case where injury results only when the wind is blowing in a certain direction.[31]

5. Amount of Damages. The right to relief against a nuisance does not depend upon the extent of damages measured by a money standard;[32] but where the nuisance complained of involves the violation of a right, the person injured thereby may have relief, although the damages are small,[33] or merely nominal,[34] or even though no appreciable[35] or actual[36] damages are shown. The fact that the continuance of the wrongful act might ripen into a right in the nature of an easement or servitude is sufficient to justify an injunction irrespective of damages.[37]

E. Effect of Matters Complained of — 1. Danger. Continual danger of loss of life or personal injury, and resulting fear of persons on or about plaintiff's premises, by reason of what is done on defendant's premises, is such injury as forms a ground of action;[38] but danger from fire is not a sufficient injury to call for an injunction to prevent the erection of a lawful structure or the carrying on of a lawful business in a proper manner,[39] nor is a structure rendered a nuisance by the mere fact that its presence enhances the rates of insurance on neighboring property.[40] A structure which is dangerous to persons using the public street is a public nuisance.[41]

2. Destruction of Means of Subsistence. One whose means of subsistence are

3. Injury to Business. The fact that the acts or erections of one person injure or seriously interfere with the business of another gives the latter a right to relief,[43] and, as the good name of a boarding or lodging house, hotel, or other place of entertainment is of vital importance to the success of the proprietor, an injury to such good name is actionable.[44]

4. Injury to Health. Injury to health resulting from the acts or structures complained of is such damage as warrants relief against them as a nuisance,[45] and even danger to health may be such damage as calls for relief.[46] But it is not necessary, in order to constitute noxious or offensive acts, occupations, or structures nuisances, that the matters complained of should affect or injure the health of the neighbors or of the general public.[47]

5. Injury to Property. Injury to adjoining property by reason of the alleged nuisance entitles the owner of such property to relief,[48] and so a fortiori does the permanent destruction or ruin of such property.[49] So a person is entitled to relief against acts or structures which injure or destroy his buildings,[50] crops,[51] trees,[52] or vegetation.[53] A depreciation in the value of property[54] or the owner's inability to find tenants for the same, because of the nuisance complained of,[55] is an injury for which he may recover. It is not, however, necessary, to constitute a nuisance, that the matter complained of should do injury to material property;[56] while, on the other hand, a use of property which does not create a nuisance cannot be enjoined or a lawful structure abated merely because it renders neighboring property less valuable.[57]

6. Injury to Public Morals. The fact that certain things are injurious to public morals is sufficient to render them public nuisances.[58]

Reasonableness of ordinance.— In an action to enjoin the use of a square for a market and weighing place as being a nuisance, it is immaterial that the ordinance establishing the place is unreasonable in requiring the entire weighing of the city to be done on one set of scales. Miller v. Webster City, 94 Iowa 162, 62 N. W. 648.

Construction of ordinance.—An ordinance making the firing of rockets weighing more than one pound a misdemeanor cannot be regarded as a license to discharge a rocket of less weight than one pound without rendering any party liable as at common law for the commission of a nuisance and the consequence thereof. Cameron v. Heister, 10 Ohio Dec. (Reprint) 651, 22 Cinc. L. Bul. 384.

Where a waiting room is erected in the streets of a city by the authority of the council thereof, it cannot be abated as a nuisance, on the complaint of an abutting lot owner, for the reason that said building partially obstructs the view of his business house by persons passing over a particular portion of the street. A statute giving to cities the power to establish and regulate public markets contemplates the use by the city of its own lands for the location of such markets and does not authorize a city to set off the residence portion of a street for a public market, over the protest of the owners of the adjoining property, thereby permitting a nuisance caused by impeding the traffic, attracting crowds, and befouling the street. Richmond v. Smith, 148 Ind. 294, 47 N. E. 630.

A contract between a county and a city authorizing the county to erect posts does not estop the city from abating the nuisance, where population has increased since the contract was made, as the contract did not contemplate a nuisance, and, even if it had done so, the city could not legalize a nuisance. 3. Unnecessary Interference With Rights of Others. It is a condition always implied by law that rights granted or regulated by statute shall be exercised by their possessors with due regard to the rights of other persons,[73] and so the fact that a person or corporation has authority from the legislature or a municipality to do certain acts does not give the right to do such acts in a way constituting an unnecessary nuisance.[74] Thus the fact that a railroad is constructed and operated

Regulating business.— Mass. St. (1866) c. 285, prescribing the thickness of walls of buildings used for manufacturing or storing petroleum, does not justify the refining of petroleum at any place where a necessary consequence of the manufacture is the emission of vapors which, by their offensive nature, constitute a nuisance at common law. resulting in the substantial impairment or destruction of the property constitute an actionable nuisance.[76]

4. Redress in Damages. The English rule is that if an injury is caused by the doing of an act authorized by parliament there is no redress whatever.[77] But it has been laid down in the United States that the full extent of legislative power to legalize and shield a nuisance is to exempt it from public prosecution,[78] for under the constitutional prohibitions against depriving persons of property without due process of law,[79] and taking property for public purposes without compensation,[80] the legislature has no power to authorize injury to private property without compensation to the owner,[81] and so the rule that what the legislature has authorized cannot be a nuisance applies only to the question of abatement,[82] and a person is entitled to recover damages for an injury to his property even though the act or structure causing the injury be expressly authorized by the legislature,[83] or by municipal license.[84] On the other hand, however, it has been held that a railroad company authorized by municipal law to operate its road through or across a street is not liable in a common-law action except for injuries done wantonly or without reasonable care,[85] and that where the acts complained of were done pursuant to a contract with the government and defendant kept within the authority given by such contract, there can be no recovery as for a nuisance.[86]

not;[89] but one who, either by negligence or design, furnishes means and facilities for the commission of an injury to another which could not have been done without them is equally responsible with the immediate wrong-doer,[90] as all are regarded as principals in maintaining a nuisance.[91] So one who merely contributes to the creation of a nuisance is liable therefor,[92] although it has been held that such a person is liable in damages only for that injury or loss which is the direct and proximate result of his acts.[93] And one who permits the establishment of a public nuisance upon property under his control is liable therefor.[94] To warrant an injunction against the continuance of a lawful business on the ground that it is a nuisance, it must be shown that the annoyance or injury alleged to result to plaintiff therefrom is caused by the acts of defendant, and does not flow from other sources over which he has no control.[95] A person cannot escape liability for the maintenance of a nuisance on the ground that in so doing he only acted as the agent of another.[96]

B. Person Continuing Nuisance. One who actively continues a nuisance is as much answerable therefor as he who first created it.[97] Thus where the owner

Failure to repair sewer.— Where a sewer connecting with a city main sewer is built at the expense of the landowner, and under the city ordinance it is his duty to repair the same at his expense on consent of the city, he is liable for a nuisance created by its want of proper repair, in the absence of evidence to show that the city refused to allow him to repair. Cohen v. Bellenot, (Va. 1899) 32 S. E. 455.

Liability of "manager."— One who is the secretary and purchasing agent of a company, and who has charge of its manufacturing department, and exercises supervision over the engine room, and is regarded by other employees and officers as de facto president, is "manager" of the concern within Mo. Laws (1901), p. 73, providing that the manager, etc., of any building or establishment from which dense smoke is emitted shall be deemed guilty of a misdemeanor.
